I believe the President must have available a permanent council of experts and advisors with whom he has direct access to coordinate the complex components of the President's economic policy. A coordinated economic strategy to increase our Nation's competitiveness involves a complex set of policy formulations, including trade, tax, monetary, budget, education, labor, environmental, science and technology, and regulatory policies. All of these policies impact our Nation's ability to compete and it is vital that each be considered as within the context of our competitive position. The President understands this. In fact, the President recently reorganized the White House and established the Policy Coordinating Group to smooth executive branch consideration of domestic policy.

While the President's reorganization is clearly a step in the right direction, we should put into statute a National Economic Council to develop and coordinate economic policy. While some may argue that this will intrude upon the President's discretion in organizing the White House, no one will argue that the National Security Advisor has played an insignificant role in the development of foreign policy.

A permanent National Economic Council should be established as a comparable office. Each President will ultimately decide what issues to focus on, and what staff to rely on in implementing his program. The National Economic Council will make permanent a framework for coordinating domestic policy in the way that national security has been successfully coordinated.

This is particularly vital as international trade and competitiveness emerge as essential elements of our economic and national security. Such a council would bring focus and coordination to domestic and international economic issues at the highest level of government.

Under this legislation, the Council would advise the President with respect to the integration of domestic and international policies relating to the economy and competitiveness and enable the Government to operate more effectively in these matters. The Council would formulate, and at the direction of the President, implement a coordinated economic strategy which will provide the economic environment necessary for our Nation to be on an equal basis with foreign competitors. In addition, the Council would be responsible for assessing the ability of the United States to compete internationally, and the risks of a failure to meet this challenge.

Former President Richard Nixon, in his book "Seize the Moment: The Renewal of America," calls for the creation of a National Economic Council and writes:

> In our embassies abroad and our bureaucracies at home, economic issues must receive the same priority attention as political and military issues. Today they seldom get it. In Japan, government is an ally—and some say even an instrument—of business. Too often in America, government is an opponent of business. This does not mean that we should adopt a national industrial policy under which unqualified bureaucrats would dictate business decisions.

Nor does it mean that we should subsidize American industry to even the score with Japan or other industrialized powers. But it does mean that we must take steps to ensure that we have a coherent strategy to prevail in the global economic competition and that U.S. multinational corporations are enabled to compete on a fair and equal basis with their foreign rivals.

President Nixon makes a very strong case for the need to highlight and coordinate comprehensive international economic strategy in the same way that the President considers national security issues.

Both involve areas vital to our national security and prosperity and require high level attention by the President and his policy advisors.

On April 7, I introduced S. 2531, legislation to establish a Commission on Federal Government Reform to examine executive and legislative branch organization and structure. In order for our Nation to become more competitive, Government must be more responsive and efficient. Unlike past reorganization efforts, this Commission would have significant powers, with its recommendations going into effect unless rejected by either the President or Congress.

While the Commission is comprehensive long-term reform, the National Economic Council is part of a package of reforms I believe is necessary to make our Nation more competitive.

The No. 1 challenge facing us is our ability to compete internationally. This is more than a question of breaking down trade barriers, and requires a comprehensive economic strategy. Such a strategy demands the sustained attention at the highest levels of the Federal Government. With the creation of the Policy Coordinating Group, President Bush moved a step in the right direction.

But this legislation raises the stature of that group to the equivalent of the National Security Council, and given the critical nature of the challenge confronting us, I believe a statutory backing of this council is required.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of the bill discussed in my statement.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2712

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that:

(1) Domestic and international economic policy are essential elements of our national security. America's leadership in the world can be attributed in large measure to the success of our nation's economic vitality. That success, and our nation's security, is being challenged by the growth in international economic competition.

(2) One of the fundamental lessons of the Cold War period is that a strong military nation can not achieve national security without economic vitality.

(3) The ability of the United States to compete internationally is central to the nation's economic prosperity and security. Exports now account for more than ten percent of our nation's gross domestic product and are a growing percentage of our nation's output. Increased exports are fundamental to facilitating job creation and economic growth.

(4) As we enter the post-Cold War period with an increased focus on a nation's ability to compete in world markets, America's ability to produce exports and be competitive is in need of constant and high level attention by our nation's policy makers.

(5) The President's National Security Council has played a vital and constant role in the successful development and coordination of America's national security policy since the creation of the Council in 1947.

(6) To be successful, policies to meet the challenges of international competitiveness must be given the same coordinated high level attention as our successful national security policy. In order to remain a strong economic force in the increasingly competitive global economy, America needs a coordinated economic strategy which will allow our country to be on a competitive basis with other nations, taking into account the free market system which has been the hallmark of our economic system.

(7) The President must have available a permanent council of experts and advisors which have direct access to the President and can coordinate the complex components of the President's economic policy to facilitate exports and job creation.

(8) An organization equivalent to the National Security Council should be established within the Executive Office of the President to develop and coordinate economic policy as trade and global competition emerge as essential elements of our national security. The National Economic Council should bring focus and coordination to domestic and international economic policies at the highest level of government and should be recognized as the President's organization for developing and coordinating these policies.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF THE NATIONAL ECONOMIC COUNCIL.

(a) There is established a council to be known as the National Economic Council (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Council").

(b) The President of the United States shall preside over meetings of the Council: Provided, that in his absence he may designate a member of the Council to preside.

(c) The Council shall be composed of—

(1) the President;

(2) the Vice President;

(3) the United States Trade Representative;

(4) the Secretary of Commerce;

(5) the Secretary of Treasury;

(6) the Director of the Office of Science and Technology Policy;

(7) the Director of the Office of Management and Budget;

(8) the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors; and

(9) any other individual as the President may direct.

(d) The Council shall have a staff to be headed by the National Economic Advisor who shall be appointed by the President. The National Economic Advisor is authorized, subject to the civil-service law and chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of Title 5, to appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as may be necessary to perform such duties as may be prescribed by the Council in connection with the performance of its functions.

SEC. 4. FUNCTIONS OF THE NATIONAL ECONOMIC COUNCIL.

(a) The function of the Council shall be to advise the President with respect to the integration of domestic and international policies relating to the economy and international competitiveness so as to enable the Federal government to operate more effectively in matters involving our nation's ability to compete in the global economy.

(b) In addition to performing such other functions as the president may direct, the Council shall—

(1) formulate and implement a coordinated economic strategy which will provide the economic environment necessary for our country to be on a competitive basis with other nations;

(2) assess the ability of the United States to compete internationally, and the risks of a failure to meet this challenge, for the purpose of making recommendations to the President in connection therewith;

(3) consider policies and matters of common interest of the departments and agencies of the Government concerned with the economy and international competitiveness, and to make recommendations to the President in connection therewith; and

(4) define a set of guidelines for government interaction with the market, taking into account the free market system which has been the hallmark of our national economy.

(c) The functions of the council under this Act shall be performed—

(1) subject to the direction of the President; and

(2) for the purpose of effectively coordinating the policies and functions of the Federal departments and agencies relating to the economy and international competitiveness.

(d) The Council shall, from time to time, make such recommendations, and such other reports to the President as it deems appropriate or as the President may require.

By Mr. HARKIN:

S. 2713. A bill to amend the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 to allow Medicare administrative funding to increase and thereby combat waste, fraud, and abuse, and for other purposes; pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, referred jointly to the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

MEDICARE PROGRAM PROTECTION ACT

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I am introducing the Medicare Protection Act of 1992. This legislation, if enacted, would protect the Medicare Program from billions of dollrs now lost to overpayment, fraud, and abuse. This legislation, if adopted, would save an estimated $2 billion in its first year of operation.

Mr. President, this is an issue that I have been following for sometime in my capacity as chairman of the Labor, Health and Human Services and Education Subcommittee. The very first hearing I held as chairman of the Subcommittee in February 1989 was on this issue.

As the Members know, the Medicare Program is managed by 64 different contracts awarded by the Health Care Financing Administration. These contracts are funded by an appropriation which in 1992 totaled $1.7 billion. Included within this line item for Medicare contractors is an amount of $324 million made available for audit activities. Even though these audit activities save $13 for every dollar spent, the administration has never funded this audit activity at an appropriate level. This is because the need to process claims and make payments on time has always taken priority. In these times of fiscal stress this fact of life has held down funding for the audit activity.

In the spring of 1989 I had discussions with Senator SASSER, chairman of the Senate Budget Committee and with Richard Darman, Director of the Office of Management and Budget. In these discussions I tried to reach agreement on excusing funds spent on audit activities in the Medicare Program from budget ceilings. The precedent for doing that was included in previous omnibus budget reconciliation bills when the Finance Committee was given credit for directing increased appropriations for this audit activity. So in other words, the Finance Committee received spending relief by directing discretionary spending to be made by transfers from the trust fund to the audit activities of Medicare. This relief had been given to the Finance Committee. Chairman SASSER and OMB Director Dick Darman, while sympathetic to my arguments, were unable to provide my Appropriations Subcommittee with similar relief.

Mr. President, in the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990, another precedent for what I am now proposing was adopted into law. Included in that act was authority for the IRS to spend up to specified amounts in each of 5 years on audit activities without these additional appropriations being scored against budget ceilings. The logic of this provision is that these additional expenditures will produce collections or revenues for the government well in excess of the actual amount spent. The logic of this provision is that to unnecessarily inhibit spending on these audit activities is counter production to our efforts to reduce the deficit.

Mr. President, the bill I am introducing today is based on exactly the same logic that supports increased funding for IRS audit activity.

The Medicare Protection Act of 1992 will encourage, for each year, starting with fiscal year 1992, through fiscal year 1995, audit activities of the Medicare contractors appropriation to be set at a level of 11.6 percent over the previous year's level. This increased amount over the freeze level would not count against the budget ceilings. These increases in audit activity will permit substantial savings each year.

It is my view that these audit activities should at least keep up with the increased growth rate in claims if we are to have adequate protection for taxpayer dollars. The 11.6 percent allowable growth is included in the legislation as it represents the 10 year historical average of growth in Medicare claims workload.

Mr. President, the Medicare Program Protection Act of 1992, if enacted, would save approximately $2 billion in the first full year of implementation and additional billions for each year through fiscal year 1995. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

Their being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2713

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION. 1. SHORT TITLE.

SEC. 2. ADJUSTMENTS TO DISCRETIONARY SPENDING LIMITS.

Section 251(b)(2) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is amended by inserting at the end the following:

"(G) MEDICARE ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—To the extent that appropriations are enacted that provide additional new budget authority (as compared with a base level of $1,457,000,000 for new budget authority) for the administration of the medicare program by fiscal intermediaries and carriers pursuant to sections 1816 and 1842(a) of title XVIII of the Social Security Act, the adjustment for that year shall be that amount, but shall not exceed—

"(i) for fiscal year 1992, $157,000,000 in new budget authority and $157,000,000 in outlays;

"(ii) for fiscal year 1993, $187,000,000 in new budget authority and $187,000,000 in outlays;

"(iii) for fiscal year 1994, $209,000,000 in new budget authority and $209,000,000 in outlays; and

"(iv) for fiscal year 1995, $223,000,000 in new budget authority and $233,000,000 in outlays; and the prior year outlays resulting from these appropriations of budget authority and additional adjustments equal to the sum of the adjustments that were allowable in the preceding fiscal years under this subparagraph.".

SEC. 3. CONFORMING AMENDMENT.

Section 606(d)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by inserting "251(b)(2)(G)," after "251(b)(2)(D),"

By Mr. SANFORD:

S. 2714. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to assist in the recruitment and retention of mathematics and science teachers, to provide matching funds for the promotion of mathematics or science secondary schools, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE TEACHER REQUIREMENT AND RETENTION ACT

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, remaining economically competitive in the world economy demands an education system that can produce top-quality math and science specialists. Furthermore, in today's job markets, where technological skills are becoming increasingly important, it is imperative that every American student receives an adequate education in mathematics and the natural sciences. Our Nation's graduate schools—the world's best—won't be able to train the highest caliber engineers, scientists, and mathematicians unless our high schools give our students the basic education they need in these subjects.

Yet, sadly, math and science education in many primary and secondary education systems is not what it should be. In a recent study by the Educational Testing Service, American 13-year-olds performed at or near the bottom on an international mathematics and science assessment. In another ETS study, fewer than half of all American high school seniors demonstrated a solid grasp of decimals, percents, fractions, or simple algebra. Only 5 percent showed an understanding of geometry or advanced algebra—subject matter that is a necessary preparation for the study of advanced mathematics at the postsecondary level.

These statistics bode ill for the future. It is estimated that 10 years from now the United States will need a million more chemists, physicists, biologists, and engineers than it will graduate. The number of American college students majoring in math and science is shrinking. At the high school level, as many as half of all math and science teachers are not trained to teach their subjects, and schools often have difficulties filling vacancies in these positions. The education community has handled teacher shortages in such subjects as physics, mathematics, chemistry, and computer science by reducing requirements for entry into the profession, so that nearly one-third of all high school students take math or science courses from instructors who have little or no specialized training in that subject matter.

I am introducing legislation today that will offer help to our children and their teachers. Provisions in my bill seek to motivate qualified educators and professionals to teach math and science in our public elementary and secondary schools. The legislation also encourages States to place special emphasis on math and science education by creating schools for students with a particular aptitude for these subjects.

The Mathematics and Science Teacher Recruitment and Retention Act offers a $1,000-a-year Federal tax credit to any teacher with at least 5 years' teaching experience who takes 6 college credits of science and/or math courses. The bill also provides for a Federal income tax deduction for education expenses incurred by qualified professionals in math and science who take courses leading to teacher certification. We should be doing all we can to encourage experts in these fields to share their knowledge with our young people, and my legislation promotes that goal.

These provisions in the bill will help eliminate the shortage of math and science teachers by encouraging experienced teachers to receive training in these subjects and by helping professionals in the math and science fields to make a career change to teaching. The bill also encourages current math and science teachers to enhance their teaching skills by taking advanced training in their areas of interest.

In addition to increasing the supply of math and science teachers, my bill also provides matching funds for special schools of math and science. North Carolina some 16 years ago created a high school for science and mathematics, a residential school drawing promising students from across the State. The results have been outstanding. We are creating scientists for the future. The faculty attracted to this kind of school is superb. Leaders from other States have toured this institution with great envy. The bill I am introducing today is designed to encourage the development of these kinds of specialized schools across the country, by offering modest planning grants which must be matched three to one by States with an interest in such a school.

Our work force will be equipped to handle the high-tech jobs of the future only if American students receive an adequate education in our Nation's elementary and secondary schools. I believe this bill represents an innovative and effective new way to protect our future, to ensure that our children get the education they deserve and that our country continues to lead the world in technological innovation into the 21st century.

By Mr. SPECTER (for himself and Mr. DECONCINI):

S. 2715. A bill to require the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to carry out demonstration projects to determine the feasibility and desirability of installing telephones in Department of Veterans Affairs health-care facilities for use by patients of such facilities; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

TELEPHONES FOR PATIENT USE IN DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS HEALTH-CARE FACILITIES

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce a bill today to authorize the Department of Veterans Affairs to establish two demonstration projects to assess the feasibility of installing telephones in patient rooms throughout the VA's health care system. This bill is intended to implement the recommendations of a General Accounting Office report, dated July 31, 1991, which concluded, in summary, that telephone service should be provided in VA patients' rooms in order to ease the burdens on VA nursing staff and to enhance the quality of care provided to VA patients.

Mr. President, VA operates the largest health care system in the United States. For the most part, VA medical centers—unlike almost all private sector hospitals today—do not have telephones in patients' rooms. As a result, VA patients place outgoing phone calls at pay telephones in hospital corridors or on carts which are wheeled to the patient's bedside by nursing staff. Incoming calls to VA patients are generally routed to the nursing staff in the patient's ward, necessitating that nursing staff take a telephone handset to the patient's bedside so that he or she may receive the call.

According to the GAO, assisting patients in making telephone calls is a primary nonclinical task which adversely affects nurse productivity. In short, Mr. President, VA nursing professionals spend entirely too much of their valuable time assisting patients in making and receiving telephone calls. One analysis cited in the GAO report, for example, estimated that VA's Boise, ID hospital—a relatively small VA facility—expended 1600 hours per year in nurse time in providing telephone-related services to patients before donated telephones were installed in patient rooms in 1986. In my view, receiving and forwarding patient calls is not the most productive use of professional nursing staff time—not in these times of nurse shortages generally and VA reports of difficulties in recruiting and retaining nurses.

The solution, of course, is for VA hospitals to do what almost all private sector hospitals have done: VA should install telephones in patient rooms for patient use. As we approach the 21st century, telephone service cannot be characterized as a frivolity or a luxury. Today, ready access to telephone service is a therapeutic necessity which should not be denied to the Nation's hospitalized veterans.

As I have stated, Mr. President, the GAO has concluded that VA's current system for patient telephone access distracts nurses from their professional duties, and is, therefore, counterproductive from the standpoint of efficient utilization of VA resources. The extent, however, to which the inefficiency of misdirected nurse time would be offset by the direct costs of installing and maintaining telephone systems in VA hospitals is not yet known. Further, while the GAO notes that systems are currently in use in private sector hospitals which allows for the direct billing of local and/or long distance fees to patients, such billing structures may not be fully adaptable to VA's unique patient populations. In addition, the full range of technical options for costing out patient telephone services are not yet fully known. Nor have all the potential policies and procedures for providing such services to physically disabled veterans, including those who are blind or hearing impaired, been fully identified. These issues, I believe, need to be explored further before VA will be prepared to procure telephones for all of its health care facilities.

This bill directs the VA to establish demonstration projects at two VA medical centers—Philadelphia and Tucson—where these and related issues may be explored. These two medical centers are appropriate demonstration project sites since both are tertiary care facilities which offer a wide range of special medical programs, including post traumatic stress disorder inpatient treatment programs and hospital-based home care services. Further, Tucson will be the site of VA's newest blind rehabilitation center. Armed with data generated by these two demonstration projects, the VA—and the Veterans' Affairs Committees and the Congress as a whole—will be in a position to determine how to proceed toward the installation of telephone service in patient rooms throughout the VA's health care system.

To summarize, this bill directs VA to set up two demonstration projects, and requires that VA report, not later than September 30, 1994, on the costs of—and the savings attributable to—demonstration project telephone installations. The bill also requires VA to report on the extent to which therapeutic advantage is gained from ready access to telephones by VA patients, including disabled VA patients. These are important first steps for VA to take now so that it may be in a position to meet my ultimate objective: Telephone installations throughout VA's hospital and nursing home system by 1996. I urge my colleagues to support this important measure.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2715

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS TO EVALUATE TELEPHONES FOR PATIENT USE AT DEPARTMENT HEALTH-CARE FACILITIES.

(a) DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.—In accordance with this section, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall carry out demonstration projects to evaluate the feasibility and desirability of—

(1) the installation of telephones in Department of Veterans Affairs health-care facilities; and

(2) the use of such telephones by the patients of such health-care facilities.

(b) DEMONSTRATION FACILITIES.—The Secretary shall carry out a demonstration project under this section at the following Department health-care facilities:

(1) Philadelphia Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

(2) Tucson Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center, Tucson, Arizona.

(c) PROJECT ACTIVITIES.—(1) In carrying out a demonstration project under this section at a facility referred to in subsection (b), the Secretary shall—

(A) install and maintain telephones of an appropriate number and type (as determined by the Secretary) in patient rooms of the facility; and

(B) subject to paragraph (2), provide for the use of such telephones by patients who are assigned to such rooms while receiving care at the facility.

(2) The Secretary shall ensure that patients who use telephones pursuant to paragraph (1)(B) shall bear financial responsibility for the cost of any long-distance telephone calls made during such use.

(d) PROJECT EVALUATION.—In evaluating the feasibility and desirability of the installation and use of the telephones referred to in subsection (c), the Secretary shall determine—

(1) the cost to each health-care facility referred to in subsection (b) of the installation, use, and maintenance of such telephones, including—

(A) the cost to the facility of such installation, use, and maintenance;

(B) the amount of any savings which accrue to the facility by reason of such installation and use (including the amount of any savings that result from a decrease in the amount of assistance in using telephones that the staff of the facility would otherwise provide to patients); and

(C) any costs that result from the necessity of providing special telephones or other special equipment to facilitate the use of telephones by disabled veterans (including veterans who are receiving long term psychiatric care or nursing care or who are blind or hearing impaired); and

(2) the impact of the use of such telephones on the therapeutic course of veterans who receive care at the facility, including the veterans referred to in paragraph (1)(C).

(e) REPORT.—Not later than September 30, 1994, the Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Veterans' Affairs of the House of Representatives a report containing—

(1) the determinations of the Secretary under subsection (d);

(2) an assessment by the Secretary of the feasibility and desirability of providing telephones for patients in other health-care facilities of the Department; and

(3) any additional information and recommendations with respect to the provision and use of patient telephones at Department health-care facilities as the Secretary considers appropriate.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, VA medical centers do not, and historically have not, provided bedside telephones for the use of patients. VA patients consequently must receive incoming calls and place outgoing calls from pay phones in hospital corridors or mobile phones which are brought to them. Bedridden patients lacking access to mobile phones may require help in reaching corridor phones. Where mobile phones are available, the patient must wait for someone to bring it. In either case, the consequent inconvenience to both patient and nurse—not to mention the additional burden of dependency demanded of patients who can't even make a simple telephone call by themselves—is unwarranted and very costly.

This bill, which I am pleased to cosponsor with Senator SPECTER, would establish two demonstration projects. These projects would explore how the human inefficiencies of the current system would be offset by the costs of installing and maintaining bedside phones in VA hospitals.

Ready access to telephones can ease the social isolation often felt by bedridden patients who are away from home and family. Such access can thus potentially provide a therapeutic benefit to long-term patients. This humanitarian aspect of the problem will also be addressed, as the VA would be required to report on any therapeutic advantage gained from ready access to telephones by VA patients.

Mr. President, I again thank my friend from Pennsylvania, the ranking member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, Senator SPECTER, for his leadership on this issue and so many other issues of importance to our Nation's veterans. I am very pleased to be an original cosponsor of this important legislation and urge all other Members to support this cost effective and compassionate legislation.

By Mr. AKAKA:

S. 2716. A bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act to require the National Labor Relations Board to assert jurisdiction in a labor dispute which occurs on Johnston Atoll, an unincorporated territory of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to require the National Labor Relations Board to exercise jurisdiction over civilian employees working on Johnston Atoll.

Johnston Atoll, an unincorporated territory of the United States, is used by the Department of the Army and the Defense Nuclear Agency as a storage, incineration, and disposal site for chemical weapons. The atoll, located 171 miles southwest of the State of Hawaii, employs over 1,250 civilian and military employees to safely dispose of these lethal chemical weapons.

Over 400 of these workers are employed by a private firm under a cost reimbursement contract with the Department of the Army to maintain and operate the Johnston Atoll Chemical Agent Disposal System [JACADS] on the island. JACADS is a Government-owned, contractor-operated facility. Handling toxic and radioactive materials and running a high-temperature incinerator, the employees work in a potentially dangerous environment day in and day out. Such hazardous duty is essential, however, if the United States is to destroy its arsenal of chemical weapons and reduce the international threat posed by these armaments by the 1997 deadline, set by Federal law and international agreement.

Yet, the highly skilled workers on Johnston Atoll are deprived of the rights afforded all other American workers. They are denied the ability to organize as a recognized collective under the National Labor Relations Act.

In a 1991 ruling, written by the San Francisco NLRB Regional Director, the Board denied a petition for recognition filed by 185 full-time and regular part-time operations and maintenance employees on the atoll, despite an acknowledgement by the Board of its statutory jurisdiction. The NLRB found that the employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of the National Labor Relations Act, and that the unit petitioning did qualify for collective bargaining purposes. Further, in its Decision and Order (Case 37–RC–3053), the Board notes the fact that Federal statute lists the atoll as an unincorporated territory within the judicial district of Hawaii and finds no evidence that Congress intended to exclude Johnston Atoll from NLRB jurisdiction.

The Board denied the employer's claim that it lacked statutory authority to assert jurisdiction over employers on Johnston Atoll who satisfy the Board's jurisdictional standards. The Board also determined that the employer in question did satisfy NLRB standards. Yet, the Board declined to assert jurisdiction because "such an assertion would not effectuate the purposes and policies of the Act."

The NLRB cited a 1973 decision (Facilities Management Corporation, 202 NLRB 1144), declining jurisdiction over Wake Island, as the closest applicable precedent. The author of the Johnston Atoll case identifies four factors as the basis for both decisions: the lack of local permanent residents, remoteness of location, difficulty of access, and the almost exclusive control of an island by the military as an installation.

Yet, the NLRB determined that if it were to exercise its discretion to assert jurisdiction, it would be appropriate to assert this jurisdiction over the contractor/employer since "the employer rather than the Federal Government controls the labor relations and terms and conditions of employment of the unit employees."

Examining the decision, and the Federal court and NLRB precedents supporting the petitioners claim, I am amazed at the conclusion, based on one prior case, that the assertion of jurisdiction over Johnston Atoll would not effectuate the purposes of the act.

Regardless of the merits or shortcomings of the Facilities Management Corp. case, the circumstances extant on Wake Island are distinguishable from the situation on Johnston Atoll. Johnston Atoll is not as distant as Wake Island from the United States, and it is regularly serviced by commercial air and shipping services. In addition, technological and communication advances between 1973 and 1992 permit our geographically distant territories and possessions linkage and integration to the U.S. mainland.

In recent years, the NLRB has taken jurisdiction in Micronesia, which has commonwealth status, and Midway Island. If the 1973 precedent cited did not preclude the assertion of jurisdiction in these cases, its primacy in this instance is extremely questionable.

Mr. President, allow me to review the findings in this case preceding the dismissal of the representation petition: the hearing officer found Congress did not intend to exclude Johnston Atoll from coverage under the act, the NLRB clearly has statutory authority to assert jurisdiction in this case, the employer involved satisfied the Board's jurisdictional standards, and the employee's unit is appropriate for collective-bargaining purposes.

Despite these findings supporting the merit and validity of the petition, the NLRB declined jurisdiction. In doing so, it has effectively denied American workers on Johnston Atoll the constitutional rights and protections afforded to every other citizen. The result of this decision is clear—the employees on Johnston Atoll are victims of geography. In spite of the fact that many of these workers have been employed on the atoll for years, some as many as 20 years, they are denied the right to organize and bargain with their employer solely because they work on an island installation under military regulation and governance. With no State or local agencies to appeal to, they have been denied the only vehicle available to voice their concerns and redress this grievance.

I question the logic of the conclusion that asserting jurisdiction will not effectuate the purposes and policies of the act. The hearing officer writes that he was "constrained to conclude under existing precedent" that the Board should dismiss the JACADS workers' petition and decline to assert jurisdiction.

The legislation I am introducing today removes this constraint upon the National Labor Relations Board, directs the Board to assert its rightful and federally mandated jurisdiction over Johnston Atoll, and extend equitable treatment to the employees on the atoll. I urge my colleagues to join me in providing simple fairness to every American worker, irrespective of how far they work from the shores of the continental United States.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2716

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. JURISDICTION OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, DC, March 18, 1992.

Hon. J. DANFORTH QUAYLE,
President of the Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Enclosed is a draft bill, "To amend the National Historic Preservation Act to extend the authorization for the Historic Preservation Fund."

We recommend that the bill be introduced, referred to the appropriate committee for consideration, and enacted.

The enclosed draft bill would extend through fiscal 1997 the period in which $150,000,000 per year is authorized to be included in the Historic Preservation Fund from Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act revenues. Under the National Historic Preservation Act, such revenues are included in the Fund through fiscal 1992. Monies in the Fund are available for appropriation for matching grants to the National Trust for Historic Preservation, the States, and Indian Tribes.

The Fund was last extended by the Act of October 9, 1987 (101 Stat. 800), to authorize revenues to be included in the Fund from fiscal years 1987 through 1992. In fiscal years 1987 through 1991, a total of $126,121,504 was appropriated from the Fund, and for fiscal year 1992, the President's budget requested, and the Congress appropriated, an additional $35,931,000.

Although the enclosed legislation would authorize $150 million in appropriations annually for five fiscal years, the actual amounts recommended will be set forth in annual Administration budget requests. Our recommendation that the Fund be reauthorized is not a commitment, in advance, to future budget requests in specific amounts.

Enactment of this legislation would have no "Pay-as-you-go" implications under the Budget Enforcement Act, since it would provide for neither direct spending nor increased revenues.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that this legislative proposal is in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely,

JENNIFER A. SALISBURY,
Deputy Assistant Secretary.

S. 2718. A bill to amend the National Historic Preservation Act to extend the authorization for the Historic Preservation Fund; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

NATIONAL HISTORIC PRESERVATION ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, at the request of the Department of the Interior, I send to the desk a bill "To provide for increases in authorization ceilings for land acquisition and development in certain units of the National Park System, for operation of the Volunteers in the Parks Program, and for other purposes."

I ask unanimous consent that the bill and the communication which accompanied the proposal be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2718

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 108 of the National Historic Preservation Act, as amended (16 U.S.C. 470f), is further amended by striking "1992" and inserting in lieu thereof "1997".

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, DC, March 30, 1992.

Hon. J. DANFORTH QUAYLE,
President of the Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Enclosed is a draft bill, "To provide for increases in authorization ceilings for land acquisition and development in certain units of the National Park System, for operation of the Volunteers in the Parks Program, and for other purposes."

We recommend that the bill be introduced, referred to the appropriate committee for consideration, and enacted.

The President's budget estimate for fiscal year 1993 for the National Park Service includes funds for land acquisition at two units of the National Park System, and for development at six units, which exceed the statutory limitation on authorization for appropriations for these purposes.

In addition, the budget estimate for the Volunteers in the Parks Program for fiscal year 1993 exceeds the statutory authorization for appropriation ceiling for this program.

The enclosed draft bill would amend the enabling Act of each of the eight specific units of the National Park System, and the Volunteers in the Parks Act of 1969, to increase the ceiling of the authorization for appropriation by an amount sufficient to accommodate the President's budget estimate.

It should be noted that this Department submitted legislation in the First Session of the 102d Congress to accommodate increases in the fiscal 1992 budget for Channel Islands National Park and Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area. The enclosed draft bill would also increase ceilings for these two areas, but by different amounts. Since it represents authorization for appropriations through fiscal 1992 and current Administration budgetary policy, the enclosed bill should be viewed as superseding the proposed legislation submitted earlier, insofar as those two park areas are concerned.

Enclosed is a chart showing the existing statutory ceiling on authorization for appropriations for each of the areas and programs concerned, and the amounts appropriated through fiscal year 1992, the fiscal year 1993 request, and the new authorization for appropriations established under this draft legislation.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that this legislative proposal is in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely,

JENNIFER A. SALISBURY,
Acting Assistant Secretary.

By Mr. PRYOR:

S. 2719. A bill to require the United States Trade Representative to take action authorized under section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974 against certain foreign countries in retaliation for the imposition by such countries of a ban on the importation of rice and rice products of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

AUTHORIZATION OF ACTION AGAINST CERTAIN FOREIGN COUNTRIES IN RETALIATION FOR BANS ON RICE AND RICE PRODUCTS

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I rise today to offer a bill which would require the administration to commence proceedings that will force the Governments of Japan, Taiwan, and South Korea to end unjust and illegal bans on rice imports. This ban is an insult to American rice farmers, international trade negotiations, and the universal rules of fair play. The legislation I am introducing would require the U.S. Trade Representative to file a complaint under section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974 against Japan, Taiwan, and South Korea, all of whom maintain bans on the import of rice from the United States and other exporting countries.

The affront by these three nations warrants a strong reaction by the Bush administration. As a matter of principle and an expression of determination this administration should, in my opinion, have already taken such steps. Indeed, the authority to initiate these proceedings rests with the executive branch of government, yet we have reached a point where we should not wait any longer for the Bush administration to make up its mind.

As Japanese, Taiwanese, and South Korean electronics, automobiles and other products continue arriving in our Nation, American rice farmers have attempted to cope with a less than satisfactory price for their commodity and continuing increase for the cost of production. As U.S. agriculture has received tremendous budget reductions in its programs it as become clear that access to markets abroad is critical. This access is vital not only for the financial viability of our farmers, but for the creditability of these countries and their roles in the GATT. The administration is not only guilty of foot dragging on this act of fairness; it will likely oppose my bill. The administration will claim this legislation interferes with the negotiating process currently underway in GATT, but in truth, this is not interference. This would not enact proceedings until after the GATT negotiations are complete. Some will ask us to wait until the negotiations are over, but Mr. President, we have been waiting for 5 years. The Japanese track record in this area doesn't give Arkansas farmers much reason for hope: Earlier this year, the government of Japan refused to include rice on a list of tariff reduction offers that were submitted to the GATT. This is only the latest action that demonstrates the Japanese are not serious about participating in the current multilateral effort to reform world trade. Japan has continued to block progress in the Uruguay round by insisting that it be allowed to maintain its GATT illegal rice policy, which includes subsidies to their rice producers that are eight to ten times the world market price.

This bill will allow negotiations to continue until March 1, 1993, the last day when trade legislation can be submitted to Congress under the fast track legislation. If the United States is not successful in securing access to the rice markets in Japan, Taiwan, and South Korea by then, a period of over 9 months from today, the Trade Representative would be required to take retaliatory action under the two options provided under section 301(c) of the Trade Act of 1974. These include either suspending existing trade concessions or imposing duties, tariffs or other restrictions on products imported from those countries. It is my hope that this type of action will not be required to secure access to the rice markets in these countries. It is instead, my strong belief that this legislation will act as an incentive in promoting an early and fair agreement on market access.

Economic success for the three nations this bill is directed toward has been greatly assisted by the presence of open markets abroad, including the United States. We have done more than our share as a nation in showing patience with this outdated and unnecessary practice. It is time for a firm, fair and contemporary approach to this ongoing problem. If Japan, Taiwan, and South Korea are not prepared to reform and acknowledge the sound reason in lifting their rice bans, then let them face this bill as the alternative.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this bill.

PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: There is enclosed with this letter a draft bill for consideration of the Congress.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised us that there is no objection from the standpoint of the administration's program to the submission of this draft legislation to the Congress, and that its enactment would be in accord with the President's program.

Thank you.

S. 2724. A bill to restore the value of the Section 29 credit and to make the credit permanent; to the Committee on Finance.

NONCONVENTIONAL FUELS ACT

• Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Nonconventional Fuels Act of 1992. The amendments in this legislation are virtually important to the future development of nonconventional fuel sources.

The Nonconventional Fuels Act would restore the usefulness of the section 29 credit. This credit was created by the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980. However, its value was diminished by the passage of the Tax Reform Act of 1986. The imposition of the alternative minimum tax created by that legislation has greatly reduced the incentive to produce nonconventional fuels.

Without relief from the alternative minimum tax, the production of nonconventional fuels could come to an end. While the initial cost of nonconventional wells is similar to that of conventional wells, the long-term operating costs of a nonconventional well can be so much as 400 percent more than the cost of a conventional well.

Certainly the war in the Persian Gulf demonstrated the need to develop and maintain domestic energy sources. The Clean Air Act Amendments of 1991 and the National Energy Security Act of 1992 affirm the importance of natural gas in meeting the Nation's energy needs in an environmentally sound manner. However, while the Federal Government encourages the production of nonconventional fuels in these important bills, it discourages production with the alternative minimum tax.

The Nonconventional Fuels Act of 1992 restores the usefulness of the section 29 credit in three important ways: First, this measure would reduce the required tentative minimum tax by 50 percent, effectively reducing the alternative minimum tax to 10 percent. Second, this legislation permits producers to carry forward credits earned, even if they do not make money in a given year. Finally, the Nonconventional Fuels Act would make the section 29 credit permanent, allowing producers to plan for long-term development of the nonconventional fuels industry.

The Nonconventional Fuels Act of 1992 is critical to our country's environment and our future energy security.•

By Mr. CRAIG:

S. 2725. A bill to authorize extension of time limitations for a FERC-issued license; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EXTENSION OF TIME ON AN FERC-ISSUED LICENSE

• Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I am today introducing legislation to authorize the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to extend for up to 6 years the date for the commencement of construction of the Arrowrock Dam hydroelectric project, FERC Project No. 4652. This legislation would authorize FERC to extend that date through a single order, or a series of orders, for up to 6 years.

This 56-megawatt hydroelectric project is located at an existing Bureau of Reclamation dam in the State of Idaho. The dam was completed in 1915.

On March 27, 1989, the FERC issued a license for the Arrowrock project. Before doing so, the applicant had to prove to the satisfaction of the FERC that it would comply with all applicable environmental laws and regulations.

Under the Federal Power Act, a licensee has 2 years to commence construction, with the right to extend that commencement of construction date once for 2 extra years. The licensee filed for and received its 2-year extension. Under the terms of the Federal Power Act the FERC is powerless to further authorize an extension of the commencement of construction date, regardless of how meritorious such extension might be. Thus, without this legislation the license will expire on March 26, 1993, and this environmentally benign project located at an existing dam may not come to pass.

It is important to note that no new water impoundments will be created as part of this hydroelectric project. It is a retrofit of an existing dam and impoundment with power generating equipment. Irrigation and flood control releases from the existing Arrowrock reservoir will be used to generate electricity. The hydroelectric project is incidental to the operation of the reservoir.

No significant environmental impacts will occur from the project. State and Federal agencies, such as the Idaho Fish and Game, the Idaho Department of Parks, the U.S. Forest Service, the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, and the U.S. Corps of Engineers have reviewed the project in detail. All environmental concerns have already been fully addressed through the FERC licensing process.

The licensee is committed to construct the project, having made or committed to make expenditures already in excess of $500,000 to obtain the license. It would be a shame if, after such an expenditure of moneys, the project lost its license.

Mr. President, it is for these reasons that I am introducing this legislation and I hope that it will be acted on expeditiously by the committee of jurisdiction, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.•

By Mr. BIDEN (for himself and Mr. THURMOND) (by request):

S. 2726. A bill to implement and authorize weed and seed activities and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WEED AND SEED IMPLEMENTATION ACT OF 1992

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague and chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator BIDEN, in introducing this important measure. The Weed and Seed Implementation Act of 1992 authorizes the necessary appropriations for the expanded Weed and Seed Program for fiscal year 1993 and succeeding fiscal years. It also includes various other proposals pertaining to the implementation of the Weed and Seed Program.

Despite its success as a demonstration project, some are still unfamiliar with what weed and seed actually is. Weed and seed is a comprehensive, multiagency approach to combating violent crime, drug use, and gang activity in high-crime neighborhoods. Simply, the objective is to weed out the crime for targeted areas and then seed these communities with a variety of social programs to keep crime from returning. In these days of tight fiscal budgets, weed and seed appropriately coordinates resources and services to ensure that limited dollars are spent effectively.

This legislation substantially expands the Weed and Seed Program. In particular, the bill authorizes $500 million in 1993 for the weed and seed effort. This legislation will foster further cooperation between the Federal agencies which will result in a coordinated social service and community assistance effort for those targeted areas. A majority of this additional funding will go to areas designated by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

Mr. President, this legislation recognizes that only by combining tough law enforcement with economic and moral revitalization of high-crime areas will we be able to clean up these communities. The previous failures of social programs which simply threw money at the problem can no longer be tolerated. Congress must support administration efforts to coordinate our social programs and integrate them with law enforcement. As Attorney General Barr recently stated;

> The challenge for the 1990's is to deploy and focus both our law enforcement assets and our social resources—at the same time, at the same place, and in the same mutually reinforcing way.

This legislation furthers this important objective.

For these reasons, I urge my colleagues to support the proposal.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2727. A bill to provide for the revitalization of small business concerns, promote job growth, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

SMALL BUSINESS REVITALIZATION AND JOB GROWTH ACT OF 1992

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Small Business Revitalization and Job Growth Act of 1992. It is my hope that this legislation will help bring to this body's attention the importance of America's small business community and their invaluable contribution to our continued economic viability. I look forward to working with my colleagues to develop this legislation and to explore new and innovative ways to encourage the growth of this vital sector of our economy.

By Mr. SARBANES:

S. 2729. A bill to amend the provisions of chapter 35 of title 5, United States Code, to assist Federal employees who were separated from service as a result of a reduction in force in finding new Federal employment, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

S. 2730. A bill to amend title 10, United States Code, to permit certain personnel who are involuntarily separated from the Armed Forces to enroll temporarily in health benefits plans of the Federal Employee Health Benefits Program; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

ASSISTANCE FOR WORKERS AFFECTED BY THE DEFENSE CUTBACKS

• Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, today I am introducing two bills to assist Federal workers and members of the Armed Services who are being adversely affected by defense cutbacks.

The first bill would help former Federal workers, who have lost their jobs due to a reduction in force, find employment elsewhere in the Federal Government. The legislation would require agencies to give priority to laid-off civil servants when filling vacancies.

The Office of Personnel Management [OPM] encourages agencies to do all that they can to avoid reductions in force [RIF's]. When reductions in employment are required, agencies turn first to hiring freezes and implementation of an early retirement system. However, it is clear that major reductions, such as those now occurring in the Department of Defense, will require many RIF's. In fact, a recent Office of Technology Assessment report indicates that as many as 25,000 civilians will lose their jobs during each of the next few years. While there are obviously differing views on how large our defense cutbacks should be, every scenario under consideration includes the loss of thousands of military and civilian jobs.

There are already a number of programs in place to assist employees who are fired due to a reduction in force. Each agency, including the Department of Defense, administers a Priority Placement Program. Such programs assist career employees who have received a RIF notice in finding a similar job elsewhere in the same agency. These programs have historically placed as many as 50 percent of employees but, more recently, have been less successful. Given the projections, it is unlikely that the Department of Defense will be able to place many RIF'd workers through its Priority Placement Program since there will be far fewer vacancies throughout the Department.

Career employees who have been notified that they will be RIF'd also qualify for an Interagency Placement Program run by OPM. A similar effort, the Displaced Employee Program [DEP], is designed to assist employees after they have actually been RIF'd. In both cases, employees voluntarily join a data base that identifies their occupational and geographic preferences. When Federal agencies are trying to fill a vacancy, OPM forwards information about potential candidates from the two programs. Agencies are supposed to give priority to considering these candidates but often skirt that guideline.

I understand that there have been many examples where agencies have used alternative methods, such as the outstanding scholars program, to fill vacancies and avoid hiring displaced workers. However, according to recent GAO testimony, these placement programs are not working effectively. Speaking before the House Subcommittee on Human Resources, GAO noted that:

> Agencies have options other than hiring a DEP registrant or objecting to the registrant's qualifications. Although blocked from hiring competitively, agencies may leave vacancies unfilled, or fill them noncompetitively through merit promotion, transfer, or reinstatement.

Yet another placement program is the Defense Outplacement Referral System, which assists Department of Defense employees in finding both government and private sector positions.

Mr. President, all of these programs are well-intentioned and I am confident that OPM has tried to make them work. However, the bottom line is that RIF'd workers often have problems finding another Federal job. I understand that some Federal managers even avoid hiring RIF'd workers because of a belief that they are tainted or perhaps not up to par with other potential applicants.

It is my view that Congress should mandate that Federal agencies give top priority to rehiring the workers RIF'd by the Defense Department and other departments. It is the least we can do to assist these workers, many of whom find themselves facing unemployment and the related financial problems after 10 or even 20 years of hard work for the citizens of this Nation.

At this time, Mr. President, I want to emphasize that my bill would assist only those workers who have consistently received good performance appraisals. This legislation does not give any special preference to an employee who has received an unsatisfactory appraisal. I also want to point out that my bill in no way affects the preference given to veterans in Federal hiring.

The second bill I am introducing would ensure that military personnel who lose their jobs have health insurance coverage. Currently, separated military personnel retain their CHAMPUS benefits at no cost for either 60 or 120 days, depending upon their length of service. Following that, they are able to join a USVIP plan, operated by a private insurer under a contract with the Department of Defense.

Coverage under the USVIP plan runs for 3-month periods. I understand that renewal is not automatic and some former members of the armed services may be forced out of the plan. At the same time, the maximum amount of time that an individual or family can stay in USVIP is four three-month periods or one year. After that, they are on their own.

In a tough economy like we are currently experiencing, one year may not be enough time to find a new job. My bill would allow former members of the armed services to purchase up to 18 months of coverage in any of the Federal employee health benefit plans. An individual or family would be able to choose whichever plan was best suited to their expected health needs and budget situation.

The bill I am introducing would also eliminate the need for a separate administrative system for these veterans and military families. Instead, they would have access to the wide variety of coverage and plans now available to civilian workers who lose their positions.

Mr. President, in developing these proposals I have worked closely with my Maryland colleague, Representative STENY HOYER. Congressman HOYER is working to enact companion proposals in that body.

As a member of the Democratic Task Force on Defense Conversion and a cochair of the Federal Government Service Task Force, I recognize that we in the Congress must act and must act soon to help each American who will be adversely impacted by lower defense spending. In the weeks since I started working on these two bills, other Members of the House and Senate have introduced their own measures to assist military and civilian employees who are losing their jobs. It is my view that the Congress should move swiftly to examine not only my proposals but all that have been introduced in an concerted effort to enact the best possible package as soon as possible.

Mr. President, we cannot forget how devastating it is to lose a job. Whether you're a young former Marine and find yourself without adequate health insurance or a longtime civilian engineer at the Defense Department and lose your family's sole income source, it hurts. My legislation would provide needed assistance and I urge my colleagues to join me in pushing for timely consideration and enactment.●

By Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mr. CHAFEE):

S. 2731. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to make the deduction for health insurance costs of self-employed individuals permanent, and to provide for a phased-in increase in the deductible amount of health insurance costs from 25 to 100 percent; to the Committee on Finance.

S. 2732. A bill to increase the availability, portability, and affordability of health insurance, especially health insurance for small employers, by prohibiting discriminatory practices and promoting broad risk pooling among health insurers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

HEALTH BENEFITS FOR SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS ACT AND HEALTH INSURANCE MARKET REFORM ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, one of the most critical issues facing the country today is the need for reform of our health care delivery system. But while we all agree on the need, we have been guilty of simply giving lipservice to our concerns. It is the hope of this Senator that the situation is about to change.

Today, joined by my distinguished colleague from Rhode Island, Senator CHAFEE, who also serves as the chairman of the Republican Health Care Task Force, the Senator from Kansas is introducing two of the President's proposals related to health care reform. The first provides for raising the allowable deduction for health insurance premiums for the self employed to 100 percent. The second bill contains the administration's small market reform legislation.

Both of these bills are similar, if not identical, to bills or portions of bills introduced by both Republicans and Democrats. There is, in fact, little in dispute with respect to the goals we hope to obtain in the passage of these bills, that is, increased access to affordable health insurance which translates into increased access to care. One would think we could agree on the details and move these bills this year. But unfortunately it appears election year politics may prevent even this limited progress from being made. There are those who want to hold out for everything—and who may ultimately get nothing. I, for one, hope that won't be the case.

We introduce these bills today, so that the administration will have the opportunity to have their views known as we begin the debate on health care reform. These do not represent their entire plan, but rather two initial components—with more to follow. And while we may not agree on every detail, they deserve to be heard.

The distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, my good friend Senator BENTSEN, has taken a strong stand in support of the need for health care reform. His own bill reflects views similar to my own with respect to small market reform and I am sure, that given the chance, we could all come to agreement.

I am pleased the administration has put forward its own proposal and hope the opportunity to make at least some limited progress, is given to us.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the bills and the accompanying materials be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2731

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Health Benefits for Self-Employed Individuals Act of 1992".

SEC. 2. PERMANENT EXTENSION AND INCREASE IN HEALTH INSURANCE DEDUCTION FOR SELF-EMPLOYED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 162(l) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to special rules for health insurance costs of self-employed individuals) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an individual who is an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1), there shall be allowed as a deduction under this section an amount equal to—

"(A) 25 percent in the case of taxable years beginning on or before December 31, 1993,

"(B) 50 percent in the case of taxable years beginning on or after January 1, 1994, and on or before December 31, 1995, and

"(C) 100 percent in the case of taxable years beginning on or after January 1, 1996, "of the amount paid during the taxable year for insurance which constitutes medical care for the taxpayer, his spouse, and dependents."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1991.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, May 5, 1992.

Hon. DAN QUAYLE,
President, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On February 6, the Administration published the "President's Comprehensive Health Reform Program." The document provides extensive detail on the President's plan for reforming the health care system, including provisions addressing: market reforms, universal access to affordable health care, cost containment, administrative cost reforms, improved consumer information and containment, and substantial reform of the Medicaid program. Today I am transmitting the "Health Benefits for Self-Employed Individuals Act of 1992," which implements the President's proposal to extend the current twenty five-percent deductibility of health insurance premiums for the self-employed, and to raise the allowable deduction to one hundred percent of the premium costs.

The Department estimates that this legislation will reduce federal revenue by the following amounts:

Fiscal Year

	Total
1992	−58
1993	−246
1994	−544
1995	−885
1996	−1,292
1992–97	−5,047

These costs must be offset under the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990. The President's Budget includes $5.5 billion in mandatory outlay reduction proposals for fiscal year 1993 and over $68.4 billion in mandatory savings proposals for fiscal years 1992–1997. Any of these mandatory outlay reduction proposals would be acceptable to the Administration as an offset. More specifically, however, the Administration would propose to finance this legislation by adopting reforms to: (a) place the Medicare hospital update on a calendar year basis and (b) reform payment of laboratory services by lowering the cap from 88% to 76% of the median, updated to reflect market factors. The mandatory outlay savings from these two proposals in each of the next five years exceed the costs of our proposal to expand the health insurance deduction for the self-employed. These proposals were included in the "Medicare Budget Amendment of 1992," transmitted to Congress by Secretary Sullivan on February 21, 1992.

Thank you for your consideration. We look forward to working with the Congress on this legislation.

Sincerely,

NICHOLAS F. BRADY.

S. 2732

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Health Insurance Market Reform Act of 1992".

"(1) affordable health insurance is available to individuals and groups in every State, and premiums do not vary substantially on the basis of health status or claims experience,

"(2) States regulating health insurance do not place an undue burden on small employers, and

"(3) insurers, providers, purchasers and consumers are encouraged to contain costs of health care and health insurance.

"ESTABLISHMENT OF HEALTH INSURANCE REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 2103. (a) IN GENERAL.—The provisions of this title shall apply to health insurance plans offered in any State, and to insurers offering such plans.

"(2) FEDERAL AND STATE REGULATIONS.—

"(A) FEDERAL REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall publish proposed and final regulations implementing this section. These regulations shall be based on the NAIC model standards, if made available by the NAIC pursuant to paragraph (1) on a timely basis, with such revisions as the Secretary finds necessary. The final regulations shall become effective as of the date specified in section 2106.

"(B) STATE PROGRAM.—The Secretary shall determine, with respect to each State, whether the State has established regulatory requirements and enforcement authority adequate to ensure compliance by insurers and health insurance plans with the requirements of parts B and C. A State regulatory program may establish standards more stringent than those required under this title, if the Secretary finds that they are not inconsistent with the purposes of this title.

"(3) STATE RESPONSIBILITIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.——A State program approved by the Secretary pursuant to subparagraph (2)(B) shall take effect, in lieu of the Federal regulations under paragraph (2)(A), as of the date specified in section 2106—

"(i) for purposes of part B, with respect to all insurers and health insurance plans subject to the provisions of that part, and

"(B) EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS.—State laws or regulations under a State program approved by the Secretary pursuant to subparagraph (2)(B) shall apply as provided in subparagraph (A), notwithstanding section 514(a) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 or any other provision of law.

"(4) FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITIES.—The Secretary shall implement a program pursuant to paragraph (2)(A)—

"(A) for purposes of part C, in consultation with the Secretary of Labor, in all States with respect to those insurers and health insurance plans not subject to State regulation pursuant to paragraph (3)(A)(ii), and

"(B) for purposes of parts B and C (but subject to the provisions of paragraph (5)(C)), with respect to all insurers and health insurance plans in each State which does not have a program approved by the Secretary pursuant to paragraph (2)(B).

"(5) WAIVER AUTHORITY.—The Secretary may waive, with respect to a State or with respect to all States, any provision of this title, title XVIII, or title XIX, to such extent and for such period as he finds likely to promote the purposes or facilitate the administration of this title.

"(6) OVERSIGHT OF STATE PROGRAMS.—

(A) REPORTS REQUIRED.—The Secretary shall not find that a State program meets the requirements of this title unless it provides for submission to the Secretary, one year after the effective date specified in section 2106 and biennially thereafter, a report on the implementation and enforcement of such regulatory program.

"(B) PERIODIC REVIEWS.—The Secretary shall periodically review State programs in effect under paragraph (3) to determine whether they meet the requirements under this title.

"(C) FINDING OF NONCOMPLIANCE.—The Secretary, before finding that a State program under paragraph (3) fails to meet requirements under this title, shall notify the State of a preliminary finding of noncompliance, afford it an opportunity to correct deficiencies (which shall not be less than 30 days, and may be such longer period as the Secretary finds appropriate in the circumstances), and provide notice of a final determination of noncompliance to the State and to insurers in the State.

"NONCOMPLIANCE WITH FEDERAL IMPLEMENTATION OF PART B OR C

"SEC. 2104. For provisions imposing an excise tax with respect to noncompliance with Federal implementation of part B or C, see section 5000A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as added by section 4 of the Health Insurance Market Reform Act of 1992.

"CERTIFICATION PROCESS

"SEC. 2152. (a) APPLICATION.—An entity meeting the requirements of this part may apply to the Secretary for certification under this section as a HIN. Such application shall be in such form and submitted in such manner as the Secretary may require.

"(b) CERTIFICATION.—The Secretary shall certify as a HIN an entity meeting the requirements of section 2151 that submits an application in accordance with subsection (a). If the Secretary fails to make a determination, within 180 days after receipt of an application under subsection (a), and of all information necessary to the Secretary's determination under this subsection, that the entity does not meet the requirements of this part, the entity shall be deemed to be certified under this section.

"(c) REPORTS AND RECERTIFICATION.—(1) IN GENERAL.—A certification of an entity under this section shall be valid for a period of three years, and may be renewed upon application by the entity. The application for recertification shall be accompanied by a report demonstrating the entity's continued compliance with the conditions for certification. The entity shall be deemed to be recertified under this section unless the Secretary, within 90 days after receipt of such application and report, notifies the entity of the basis for denial of recertification.

"(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR PROVISIONAL HINS.—An entity described in section 2151(d)(2)(B) shall not be entitled to recertification unless it demonstrates satisfactory progress toward meeting the applicable standard of paragraph (1) or (2) of such subsection (d), and may not be recertified for a period beginning more than six years after the date of initial certification.

"(d) REVOCATION OF CERTIFICATION.—If the Secretary determines at any time that an entity certified as an HIN is no longer in compliance with the requirements of this part, the Secretary, after affording notice to the entity and to each member, and affording the entity the opportunity for a hearing, shall revoke the entity's certification under this part.

"APPLICATION OF INSURER RULES

"SEC. 2153. (a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided, for purposes of application of the requirements of parts B and C, a HIN certified under this part shall be considered to be an insurer, and a health insurance plan offered by or through such a HIN shall be considered to be a health insurance plan offered by an insurer.

"(b) EFFECT OF NONCOMPLIANCE WITH INSURER RULE.—Noncompliance of a HIN, or of a health insurance plan offered by or through a HIN, with applicable requirements of parts B and C, in addition to being subject to any sanction imposed under this title or any other provision of law, shall be a basis for revocation of certification or denial of recertification under this part.

"LIMITED APPLICATION OF STATE LAWS

"SEC. 2154. (a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b) or section 2103(b)(3)(B), in the case of a HIN certified under this part, no provision of State or local law inapplicable to an employee welfare benefit plan (other than a MEWA) under section 514(a) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 shall apply with respect to a HIN certified under this part, or with respect to any health insurance plan provided through the HIN, including any provision of State law imposing a tax or assessment on premiums paid under such a plan.

"(b) EXCEPTION.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to a premium tax or other assessment to the extent that the uses of revenues from such assessment are limited to—

"(1) financing (and administering) a fund specifically designated to insure against the insolvency of insurers, and

"(2) funding (and administering) an insurance pool specifically designated to provide for health insurance coverage of above average risk individuals in the State.

"EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 3. HEALTH RISK POOLING DEMONSTRATIONS.

(a) GRANTS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services may make grants to as many as four States for the establishment of health risk pooling demonstrations.

(b) MODEL HEALTH RISK POOLING SYSTEM.—The Secretary may develop model health risk pooling systems that meet the requirements of section 2116 of the Social Security Act.

(c) HEALTH RISK MEASUREMENT METHODS.—The Secretary shall develop methods for measuring the health risk differential of individuals. The methods shall rely on diagnosis or other health related information that is predictive of individual health care needs, and may rely upon information routinely collected in the process of making payments under group health insurance. The methods may provide for such random, sample audits of records as may be necessary to verify the accuracy of measurements.

(d) REQUIREMENTS FOR STATE HEALTH RISK POOLING SYSTEM.—A State that receives a grant under this section shall meet the requirements of section 2116 of the Social Security Act (except that the system for health risk pooling may, with the approval of the Secretary, apply to only part of the State).

(e) APPROVAL BY SECRETARY.—The Secretary may approve an application for a grant under this section only if the Secretary finds that the proposed health risk pooling system is likely to achieve the goal of maximizing consumer choice while minimizing the selection of individuals based on individual health status.

(f) WAIVER OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF LAW.—The Secretary may waive the applicability of some or all of the provisions of section 2115 of the Social Security Act for a State conducting a demonstration under this section.

(g) EVALUATION.—The Secretary shall evaluate demonstrations that are supported by grants under this section.

(h) APPROPRIATION AUTHORIZATIONS.—To carry out this section there are authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1994 through 1996.

SEC. 4. FAILURE TO SATISFY CERTAIN HEALTH PLAN REQUIREMENTS.

(a) In General.—Chapter 47 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to taxes on group health plans) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 5000A. FAILURE TO SATISFY CERTAIN HEALTH PLAN REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) General Rule.—There is hereby imposed on any insurer subject to Federal regulation pursuant to section 2103(b)(4) of the Social Security Act—

"(1) a tax on any failure to comply with a requirement under part C of title XXI of such Act, and

"(2) a tax on any failure to comply with a requirement under part B of title XXI of such Act.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall determine whether any person meets the requirements of such parts.

"(b) Amount of Tax.—

"(1) Plan sponsors that fail to comply with part C.—In the case of an insurer that is a plan sponsor of an employee welfare benefit plan (other than a MEWA), the amount of tax imposed by subsection (a)(1) for a taxable year in which such plan fails to comply with a requirement under part C of title XXI of the Social Security Act shall be equal to $1,000 for each eligible employee covered by such plan at any time during such taxable year.

"(2) Other insurers that fail to comply with part C.—In the case of any insurer (other than an insurer described in paragraph (1)) that fails to comply with all requirements of part C of title XXI of the Social Security Act with respect to all employment-based health insurance plans in any State, the amount of tax imposed by subsection (a)(1) for the taxable year in which such failure occurs shall be equal to $1,000 for each insured in such State covered by such plans at any time during such taxable year.

"(3) Insurers that fail to comply with part B.—In the case of any insurer that fails to comply with all the requirements of part B of title XXI of the Social Security Act with respect to all health insurance plans for small employers in any State, the amount of tax imposed by subsection (a)(2) for a taxable year in which such failure occurs shall be equal to $1,000 for each insured in such State covered by such plans at any time during such taxable year.

"(4) Persons receiving dependent coverage.—For purposes of paragraphs (2) and (3), all persons receiving the same family coverage are treated as one insured.

"(c) Controlled Groups.—

"(1) Plan sponsors.—In the case of an insurer described in subsection (b)(1), for purposes of this section all persons that are treated as part of the same employer (within the meaning of section 414) as the insurer shall be treated as the same person.

"(2) Other insurers.—In the case of an insurer described in subsections (b)(2) or (b)(3), for purposes of this section—

"(A) Controlled group of corporations.—All corporations which are members of the same controlled group of corporations shall be treated as 1 person. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term 'controlled group of corporations' has the meaning given to such term by section 1563(a), except that—

"(i) 'more than 50 percent' shall be substituted for 'at least 80 percent' each place it appears in section 1563(a)(1), and

"(ii) the determination shall be made without regard to subsections (a)(4) and (e)(3)(C) of section 1563.

"(B) Partnerships, proprietorships, etc., which are under common control.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, all trades or businesses (whether or not incorporated) which are under common control shall be treated as 1 person. The regulations prescribed under this subparagraph shall be based on principles similar to the principles which apply in the case of subparagraph (A).

"(d) Limitations on Tax.—

"(1) Tax not to apply where failure not discovered exercising reasonable diligence.—No tax shall be imposed by subsection (a) with respect to any failure for which it is established to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the person liable for tax did not know, and by exercising reasonable diligence would not have known, that such failure existed.

"(2) Tax not to apply to failures corrected within 30 days.—No tax shall be imposed by subsection (a) on any failure if—

"(A) such failure was due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, and

"(B) such failure is corrected during the 30-day period beginning on the 1st date the person liable for the tax knew, or by exercising reasonable diligence would have known, that such failure existed.

"(3) Waiver by secretary.—In the case of a failure which is due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, the Secretary may waive part or all of the tax imposed by subsection (a) to the extent that the payment of such tax would be excessive relative to the failure involved.

"(e) Definitions.—For purposes of this section, the terms 'eligible employee', 'employee welfare benefit plan', 'employment-based health insurance', 'insurer', 'health insurance plan', 'multiple employer welfare arrangement (MEWA)', 'plan sponsor', 'small employer', and 'State' have the meanings given to such terms by section 2105 of the Social Security Act."

(b) Nondeductibility of Tax.—Paragraph (6) of section 275(a) of such Code (relating to nondeductibility of certain taxes) is amended by inserting "47," after "46,".

(c) Clerical Amendments.—The table of sections for such chapter 47 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

(d) Effective Date.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on January 1, 1994.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services,
Washington, DC, May 8, 1992.

The Hon. Dan Quayle,
President of the Senate,
Washington, DC.

Dear Mr. President: On February 6th, the Administration released the "President's Comprehensive Health Reform Program." The document provides extensive detail on the President's plans for reforming the health care system, including the Administration's approach to health insurance market reform, expanded access to affordable health care, cost containment, and substantial reform of the Medicaid program.

Today, I am transmitting the "Health Insurance Market Reform Act of 1992," which implements the President's proposal to reform the health insurance market to make coverage more secure, available, and less costly for millions of Americans. In particular, the bill will expand the availability of more affordable health insurance products to all workers, but particularly to those who are employed by small businesses.

This proposal has four major components: All Americans will benefit from the increased availability of health insurance, regardless of health status. Coverage will be renewable and preexisting condition limits will be eliminated for those who maintain coverage. Workers can change jobs without fearing they will be denied insurance coverage based on their health status.

Coverage for individuals and small businesses, which otherwise would face excessively costly insurance because of their health status, will be more affordable through broad risk pooling. Insurers will participate in broad pooling arrangements to spread health risks evenly across insurers and thereby allow insurers to charge uniform premiums for the sick and the healthy. On an interim basis, pending phased implementation of this new system, insurers will be subject to limits on their ability to vary premiums because of non-demographic characteristics.

Group purchasing of health insurance by small employers will enable small employers to have the same cost advantage and market power enjoyed by larger employers. They can pool their purchasing power through Health Insurance Networks (HINs).

Health plans will have increased flexibility to control costs; they will be protected from mandated benefit and anticoordinated care laws that drive up costs and hinder designing cost-effective benefits tailored to individual and family needs.

Section 4 of the "Health Insurance Market Reform Act of 1992" could result in increased receipts to the Federal Government. Therefore, the bill is subject to the pay-as-you-go requirement of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990. The Office of Management and Budget estimates that the pay-as-you-go effect of this bill would be less than $500,000 annually.

We are advised by the Office of Management and Budget that there is no objection to the submission of the draft bill to Congress, and that its enactment would be in accord with the program of the President.

We urge the prompt enactment of the "Health Insurance Market Reform Act of 1992."

Sincerely,

Louis W. Sullivan, M.D.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF THE HEALTH INSURANCE MARKET REFORM ACT OF 1992

Sec. 2. Improved access to affordable health insurance.

Section 2 of the bill would add to the Social Security Act a new title XXI, entitled "REQUIREMENTS CONCERNING HEALTH INSURANCE", with the following provisions:

PART A—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Table of Contents

Purposes

Section 2102 states that the purposes of this title are to increase the availability, portability, and affordability of health insurance, particularly to small employers and their employees and dependents, by seeking to ensure, among other things, that—

(1) Affordable health insurance is available to individuals and groups, and premiums do not vary substantially, regardless of health status or claims experience,

(2) States regulating health insurance do not place an undue burden on small employers, and

(3) Insurers, providers, purchasers, and consumers are encouraged to contain costs of health care and health insurance.

Establishment of Health Insurance Requirements

In general

Section 2103(a) would make the provisions of title XXI applicable to health insurance plans offered in any State, and to insurers offering such plans.

Establishment and implementation of requirements

Section 2103(b) would provide for the establishment of Federal and State regulatory programs implementing the requirements of parts B and C. The Secretary of Health and Human Services ("the Secretary") would be required to request that the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC) recommend model standards by three months after enactment of the bill. Using these model standards, with revisions as necessary, the Secretary would publish implementing regulations. The Secretary would also determine whether each State had established a regulatory program adequate to ensure compliance with the provisions of parts B and C, and would periodically review State programs for continuing compliance. State programs could be more stringent than parts B and C if the Secretary found them consistent with the purposes of title XXI.

Health insurance offered, issued, or renewed in a State on or after the applicable effective date specified in section 2106 would be subject to the provisions of parts B and C. In the case of a State with an approved regulatory program, the State would enforce—

(1) The provisions of part B (concerning the small employer market) with respect to all insurers (including those otherwise exempt from State regulation pursuant to the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA)), and

(2) The provisions of part C (concerning all employment-based insurance) with respect to all insurers other than self-insured employment-based plans, offered by a single employer or other plan sponsor to more than 51 eligible employees, which were exempt from State regulation pursuant to ERISA (hereinafter "self-insured single sponsor plans").

The Secretary would enforce—

(1) In all States, the provisions of part C with respect to self-insured single sponsor plans, and

(2) In States without an approved regulatory program, all provisions of parts B and C.

(The Secretary of Labor will shortly be sending to the Congress, as a companion bill to this legislative proposal, a bill amending provisions of ERISA with respect to MEWAs and related matters. That bill will clarify that some plans, such as certain franchise arrangements and affiliated groups of employers, are to be treated as single sponsor plans for purposes of ERISA and, by extension, of this new title XXI.)

The Secretary could waive, with respect to a State or with respect to all States, any provision of this title, or of Medicare or Medicaid, to the extent and for the period he found likely to promote the purposes or facilitate the administration of title XXI.

Noncompliance With Federal Implementation of Part B or C

Section 2104 would contain a cross-reference to a new section in the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (added by section 4 of this draft bill), that would impose an excise tax for noncompliance with the requirements of part B or C when implemented by the Secretary.

Definitions

(1) "Coordinated care plan" means a health insurance plan that provides for the financing and delivery of health care services to enrollees through arrangements with participating providers, arrangements for ongoing quality assurance and utilization review, and financial incentives for enrollees to use services of participating providers.

(2) "Eligible employee" means, with respect to an employer, an employee who normally performs on a monthly basis at least 30 hours of service per week for that employer. For purposes of this definition, the term "employee" includes the employer.

(3) "Employee welfare benefit plan" and "plan sponsor" have the meanings given those terms in sections 3(1) and 3(16)(B) of ERISA.

(4) "Employer" means any person acting as an employer, or in the interest of an employer, in relation to a health insurance plan, and includes a health insurance network (HIN), a multiple employer welfare arrangement (MEWA), or other group or association of employers acting for an employer in such capacity.

(5) "Employment-based health insurance" means group health insurance (including self-insurance) obtained through any arrangement connected with the employment (including self-employment) of the individuals eligible for coverage.

(6) "Health insurance network" (HIN) means an entity certified by the Secretary under part E.

(7) "Health insurance plan" means any contract or arrangement under which an insurer bears all or part of the cost or risk of providing health care items and services, including a hospital or medical expense incurred policy or certificate, hospital or medical service plan contract, or health maintenance subscriber contract (including any self-insured health insurance plan). The term does not include insurance limited to accident, dental, vision, disability, long term care, medicare supplemental insurance, or any combination thereof; coverage supplementing liability insurance; or medical coverage under automobile insurance. Except for purposes of part D (providing for preemption of certain State laws), the term does not include workers' compensation.

(8) "Health maintenance organization" (HMO) includes entities meeting the definition of a HMO under the Public Health Service Act, or the corresponding definition for purposes of Medicare, or recognized as a HMO under State law.

(9) "Insurer" means any person (as defined in ERISA), including a HMO and a MEWA, that offers an individual or group health insurance plan under which such person is at risk for the cost of benefits under the plan, except that the term does not include, for purposes of part B, a self-insured single sponsor plan.

(10) "Multiple employer welfare arrangement" (MEWA) has the meaning given that term in section 3(40) of ERISA.

(11) "NAIC" means the National Association of Insurance Commissioners.

(12) "Participating provider" means a provider that has entered into an agreement with an insurer or another provider to provide health care items or services to patients enrolled in a specified health insurance plan.

(13) "Provider" means a physician, hospital, pharmacy, laboratory, or other person licensed or otherwise authorized under applicable State laws to furnish health care items or services.

(14) "Small employer" means, with respect to a calendar year, an employer that nor-

(15) "State" means the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

(16) "Utilization review" means review of the medical necessity, appropriateness, and quality of health care items and services. "Utilization review program" means a system of utilization review, which may include preadmission certification, the application of practice guidelines, continued stay review, discharge planning, preauthorization of ambulatory procedures, and retrospective review.

Effective Date of Parts A, B, and C

In general

Section 2106(a) would make the requirements of parts A, B, and C generally effective with respect to health insurance plans offered, issued, or renewed in a State on or after January 1, 1994 (or such later date necessary to allow for enactment of State legislation).

Exception for existing coverage

Under section 2106(b), certain provisions of section 2115 (concerning variations in premium rates among and within blocks of business, and the rate of premium increases) would not apply, until two years after the general effective date, to a renewal of a health insurance plan that was in effect on that date.

PART B—REQUIREMENTS APPLICABLE TO SMALL EMPLOYER HEALTH INSURANCE

Registration With Secretary and States

Section 2111 would require each insurer to register with the Secretary and with the commissioner or superintendent of insurance for each State in which it issues or offers any health insurance plan to a small employer.

Requirement to Make Health Insurance Plans Available to Small Employers

General requirement

Section 2112(a) would require (subject to exceptions below) that any insurer offering a health insurance plan to any small employer in a State (or to any small employer in a local service area within the State, in the case of an insurer offering health insurance only within such area) (1) make such plan available to every small employer in the State or local service area, (2) make available to every small employer a basic insurance plan (where one is specified under State law), and (3) not cancel or refuse to renew any small employer health insurance plan.

Exceptions

(1) a HIN or MEWA could make health insurance plans available only to its members, and could not be required to offer a State's basic insurance plan;

(2) A HMO or other coordinated care plan could limit availability to applicants in its geographic service area, and could deny coverage upon demonstration that it lacked the capacity to provide services and that its exclusionary rule was applied uniformly to all employers without regard to health status, claims experience, or duration of coverage;

(3) An insurer could decline coverage of an individual or small employer to the extent permitted under a State-assigned risk program;

(4) An insurer could condition availability on enrollment of a minimum percentage of a small employer's eligible employees, if the condition was imposed uniformly and was consistent with the goal of ensuring availability of health insurance to small employers;

(5) An insurer could cancel or refuse to renew coverage for nonpayment of premium, fraud or other misrepresentation, or substantial noncompliance with plan provisions, and

(6) An insurer could cancel or refuse to renew coverage if it was ceasing to provide any small employer health insurance in the State (or service area, in the case of a HMO or other coordinated care plan), but it could not then reenter the small employer market in that State for five years.

Requirements concerning renewal of expiring plan

Section 2112(c) would require an insurer providing small employer health insurance to notify the employer, at least 60 days prior to expiration, of the terms for renewal, and the extent to which any premium increase was based on actual or expected claims experience of covered individuals.

Guaranteed Eligibility of Employees of Small Employers

General Requirement

Section 2113(a) would require (subject to exceptions below) that each health insurance plan offered to any small employer in a State accept for enrollment, on the same terms as any other enrollee, every eligible employee and (in the case of a family plan) such employee's spouse and any dependent child who is under age 19 or, if older, under age 25 and a full-time student.

A small employer that made health insurance available to employees could not use criteria related to health status or claims experience to determine eligibility for, benefits under, or terms of such health insurance for individual employees.

Exceptions

(1) a HMO or other coordinated care plan could limit availability to applicants in its geographic service area,

(2) an insurer could decline coverage of an individual to the extent permitted under a State assigned risk program;

(3) an insurer that provided an initial enrollment period and an annual open season of at least 30 days each would generally not be required to enroll an individual who failed to enroll during such periods, but would be required to enroll such an individual who—

(A) had declined because of coverage under another health insurance plan, lost such other coverage involuntarily, and applied for coverage within 60 days after such involuntary termination, or

(B) was a spouse or minor child of an eligible employee, if such coverage was required by court or administrative order and application for coverage was made within 60 days after such order (or, if later, within 60 days after the spouse, or the custodial parent or guardian of the minor child, knew or should have known of the availability of coverage);

(4) an insurer could limit coverage with respect to a pre-existing condition to the extent permitted under section 2131; and

(5) an insurer could cancel or refuse to renew coverage of an individual for fraud or other misrepresentation by or on behalf of that individual.

Basic Health Insurance Plan for Small Employers

Section 2114 would permit a State to define a basic benefit plan, and to require that it be offered to all small employers in the State by insurers (other than HINs or MEWAs) offering any health insurance plans to any small employers in the State. The plan would be subject to review and approval by the Secretary to ensure that the plan was affordable by small employers.

Interim Requirements for Risk Pooling and Premium Rates

General Requirement

Section 2115(a) would require that the regulatory program with respect to a State require all insurers offering health insurance plans to small employers, during the period specified in subsection (e), (1) to participate in an interim risk pooling mechanism, and (2) to comply with requirements designed to limit variations among and increases in premium rates for such health insurance plans.

Interim risk pooling

Section 2115(b) would permit the interim risk pooling mechanism to be either a reinsurance program or an assigned risk program. The provisions for funding such a mechanism would have to include provisions for mandatory contributions by insurers to the extent necessary to ensure its financial solvency. No Federal entity could be at risk, as a guarantor of the solvency of a reinsurance fund or otherwise, for any part of the cost of health insurance plans subject to interim risk pooling.

Interim limits on variations in premium rates

Definitions

(A) "Base premium rate" would mean, with respect to health insurance plans with the same or similar coverage offered in a rating period to a group of small employers within the same block of business whose insured populations had similar demographic characteristics (including age, sex, geographic location, and any other appropriate characteristic approved by the Secretary as a rating factor), the lowest per capita premium rate which could be charged to any employer in the group under the methodology used by the insurer.

(B) "Block of business" would mean all small employers covered by a health insurance plan issued by an insurer, or, at the insurer's option, a distinct group of such employers, or a subdivision of one of the preceding groups. An insurer could treat as a distinct group all small employers whose health insurance plans (1) were sold through individuals and organizations that do not participate in marketing of the insurer's plans to other groups, (2) were acquired from another insurer as a distinct group, or (3) were provided through HIN, MEWA, or other association, with at least 100 small employer members, formed for any business- or community-related purpose. An insurer could subdivide each block described above into up to three blocks of business, but could not divide its small employer business into a total of more than six blocks.

Limit on variation of premium rates among blocks of business

Section 2115(c)(2) would provide that, for any rating period, no base premium rate for any small employer block of business could exceed the equivalent rate for any other block of the insurer by more than 20 percent.

Limit on variation of premium rates within a block of business

Section 2115(c)(3) would provide that the highest premium rate for a specific health insurance plan that an insurer can charge any small employer in a block of business for a rating period could not exceed the corresponding base premium rate by more than (1) 50 percent, for a period ending before January 1, 1997, and (2) 35 percent, for a period thereafter.

Limit on variation in premium increases

Section 2115(c)(4) would limit annual percentage increases in the premium rate charged to a small employer to the sum of the percentage charge in the base premium rate plus 5 percent.

Requirements concerning rate-setting methodology

Consistent application of rating factors

Section 2115(d)(1) would require that (1) an insurer apply rating factors consistently to all small employers, and (2) a geographic area smaller than the smaller of a county or the first three digits of a postal zip code not be used as a rating factor.

Limit on transfer of employers between blocks of business

Section 2115(d)(2) would prohibit transfer of a small employer from one block of business to another unless (1) the employer consented to the transfer and (2) the same offer was made to all other employers in the block, without regard to demographic characteristics, claims experience, health status, or duration of coverage since issue.

Full disclosure of rating practices

Section 2115(d)(3) would require an insurer, at the time it offered a health insurance plan to a small employer, to fully disclose its rating practices for small employer health plans, including rating practices for different industries, populations, and benefit designs.

Actuarial certification

Section 2115(d)(4) would require each insurer to file annually with each appropriate State insurance commissioner and with the Secretary a statement by a member of the American Academy of Actuaries (or other individual acceptable to the commissioner or the Secretary) that the insurer was in compliance with this section, and its rating methods were actuarially sound.

Effective period

Section 2115(e) would provide that, with respect to each State, (1) the provisions of this section would become effective on the date specified in section 2106, and cease to apply as of the date specified in section 2116(b)(2), and (2) during the four-year period preceding the latter date, the provisions of this section would be phased out as specified by the Secretary.

Waiver authority

Section 2115(f) would authorize the Secretary to waive requirements of this section with respect to a State, in order to permit the use of alternative mechanisms to achieve its purposes, if he found that the alternative was consistent with the purposes of title XXI and (in the case of a risk pooling mechanism) made adequate provision for its solvency.

Health Risk Pooling

Section 2116 would establish the requirements for the permanent health risk pool system in a State.

Requirements for State health risk pooling system

Section 2116(a) would require all insurers covering small employers in a State to participate in the system. An insurer would pay into the pool for below average risk individuals (those whose expected health care costs were lower than those of other individuals of similar age and other permissible categories), and would receive funds from the pool for above average risk individuals. Additional special payments could be made for outlier cases whose costs exceeded a particular threshold. The system would be administered by the State or by a non-profit board appointed by the State's governor.

Effective date and Phase-in Section 2116(b) would provide that these provisions would take effect after the preceding provisions of this title had been in effect for three years (unless the Secretary found that it would be appropriate to postpone the effective date). At first the amounts to be paid to (or received from) the pool could be based on a percentage of the expected health care cost differentials, but after four years the full differentials would be the basis.

Definitions

Section 2116(c) would define the terms "demographic class", "health risk differential", "above average risk individual", and "below average risk individual", for purposes of this section.

Continuation Coverage for Certain Students

Section 2117 would require each institution of higher education that offers coverage to its students under a health insurance plan, and insurers providing such coverage to the institution, to continue to make such coverage available for six months after a student left the institution. The institution could require its former students to pay all costs of such continuation coverage.

PART C—REQUIREMENTS APPLICABLE TO ALL EMPLOYMENT-BASED HEALTH INSURANCE

Prohibition of Denial of Coverage Based on Health Status

Section 2131 would provide that, except to the extent permitted under an assigned risk program in a State pursuant to section 2115(b)(1)(B), an insurer could not refuse to offer, refuse to renew, cancel, or condition the coverage under any employment-based health insurance plan on the basis of the health status, claims experience, receipt of health care, medical history, or lack of evidence of insurability, of one or more individuals.

Limitation on Exclusions of Pre-Existing Conditions

General rule

Section 2132(a) would provide that, except to the extent permitted by subsection (b), no employment-based health insurance plan could impose (or permit or require an insured entity to impose) a limitation or exclusion of benefits for an individual on the basis of a condition of the individual pre-existing the date of the application for coverage of the individual.

Exceptions

Section 2132(b) would permit limitation or exclusion, for not more than six months from the date of application, with respect to a condition diagnosed or treated within three months preceding that date. However, no limitation or exclusion could be imposed with respect to pregnancy, or on a child under one year of age.

If an individual previously had health insurance under Medicare or Medicaid or a health insurance plan—

(1) if such prior insurance included coverage relating to treatment of the condition, no further exclusion could be imposed under the new health insurance plan, and

(2) if such prior insurance excluded coverage for the condition, the period of limitation or exclusion permitted under the new health insurance plan would be reduced by one month for each month such prior insurance was in effect.

For purposes of this provision, an individual who had lost prior health insurance would be treated as if no break in coverage had occurred, if the period from the loss of coverage to the date of application for new coverage did not exceed—

(1) 180 days, if coverage had ceased as a result of involuntary loss of employment with respect to which the individual had received unemployment compensation, or

(2) 60 days, in any other case.

Insurers that provided such prior coverage would be required to disclose, upon request by or on behalf of an insured individual, information needed by an insurer in order to comply with this requirement.

PART D—PREEMPTION OF CERTAIN STATE LAWS RELATING TO HEALTH INSURANCE

Requirements Concerning Coverage

Section 2141 would provide that, except to the extent specifically permitted under title XXI (or permitted by the Secretary based on a determination of consistency with title XXI), no effect could be given to any provision of State law requiring the offering, as part of any health insurance plan, of any services, category of care, or services of any class or type of provider.

Requirements Creating Barriers to Managed Care

Section 2142 would provide that no effect could be given to any provision of State law that—

(1) restricted the flexibility of any private entity to negotiate the amount or terms of payment to a provider of health care items or services,

(2) prohibited or limited restrictions by an insurer or its agent on the location, number, type, or professional qualifications of providers participating in a health insurance plan,

(3) prohibited or limited provisions in a health insurance plan (other than for emergency services) (A) restricting coverage to services provided or authorized by a participating provider, (B) requiring that services be authorized by a participating primary care physician, or (C) giving enrollees financial incentives to use only participating providers,

(4) created specified barriers to use of utilization review, including—

(A) restrictions on utilization review of any or all treatments or conditions,

(B) restrictions on the use of particular procedures or criteria,

(C) requirements to disclose criteria used,

(D) requirements that reviewers be residents of or licensed by the State,

(E) requirements that reviewers have certain specialties,

(F) restrictions on the amount of payment that could be made to a utilization review program, or requirements to pay providers their costs of responding to utilization review requests,

(G) dictating the location or hours of operation of utilization review (subject to an exception for emergency treatment),

(H) restricting reviewers' access to medical information or personnel, or

(I) restricting coverage limitations with respect to enrollees failing to cooperate with utilization review.

(5) Any other restriction on utilization review that the Secretary finds inconsistent with the purposes of this title.

Effective Date

PART E—CERTIFICATION OF HEALTH INSURANCE NETWORKS (HINS)

Conditions of Certification

In general

Section 2151(a) would provide that an entity meeting the requirements of part E would be entitled to certification by the Secretary as a health insurance network (HIN).

Organization and membership

Section 2151(b) would require that a HIN be a membership organization with an elected board of directors; include small employers (although it may also include other members) with an affinity based on geographic location or a common trade, profession, industry, or other business- or community-related characteristic recognized by the Secretary, and not deny membership to any small employer that shares the affinity used as a membership criterion; and apply membership criteria uniformly, and not use criteria which would exclude groups or individuals presenting a risk of high cost. A HIN could restrict membership to employers in a single State, within a single State or multi-State local area, or in specified States.

Negotiations and arrangements with insurers and providers

Section 2151(c) would require that a HIN arrange for the purchase of insurance rather than provide it directly and bear no financial risk associated with the provision of health care, and that it deal only with insurers meeting all applicable requirements of Federal and State law in each State in which they offer such insurance. A HIN could also engage in negotiations and enter into arrangements with providers of health care services with respect to matters such as payment rates and selective provider contracts, for the purpose of obtaining favorable health insurance rates for its members.

Market share

Section 2151(d) would require that a HIN demonstrate to the Secretary's satisfaction that it was (or reasonably expected to be) representing a sufficient number of individuals to enable it to negotiate for coverage at favorable rates. This requirement would be met if the entity could show—

(1) that it represented a group of small employers with a significant share of the health insurance market in a State, a group of States, or a local area (including a multi-State metropolitan area), or met such other standard as the Secretary might establish, or

(2) in the case of an entity unable to make such a showing, that the current and projected numbers of members, and of their employees and dependents, supported a reasonable expectation that it would be able to make such showing by three years after certification.

Standards established by the Secretary for this purpose could vary depending on whether the market area encompassed more than one State, a single State, or a local area.

Fiduciary responsibilities

Section 2151(e) would require a HIN (1) to comply with the fiduciary responsibility provisions applicable to employee welfare benefit plans under part 4 of title I of ERISA, and (2) to provide to its members, before enrolling them under a health insurance plan, information on plan benefits, premium rates, cost-sharing requirements, and such other matters as the Secretary required.

Certification Process

Application

Section 2152(a) would entitle an entity meeting the requirements of part may E apply to the Secretary for certification as a HIN.

Certification

Section 2152(b) would require the Secretary to certify as a HIN an entity meeting the requirements of section 2151 that made application in accordance with subsection (a). If the Secretary failed to make a determination of noncompliance within 180 days after receipt of an application and necessary supporting information, the entity would be deemed to be certified under this section.

Reports and recertification

Section 2152(c) would provide that certification of a HIN would be valid for three years. It could be renewed upon application accompanied by a report demonstrating the entity's continued compliance with the conditions for certification. The entity would be deemed recertified unless the Secretary notified the entity, within 90 days, of the basis for denial of recertification. An entity certified on the basis of expectations of growth to a sufficient size could not be recertified unless it demonstrated satisfactory progress toward this goal, and could not be recertified for a period beginning more than six years after the date of initial certification

Revocation of certification

Section 2152(d) would require the Secretary, if he determined at any time that a certified entity no longer met the requirements of part E, to revoke the entity's certification after affording notice to the entity and to each member, and affording the entity the opportunity for a hearing.

Application of Insurer Rules

Section 2153 would provide that, for purposes of parts B and C, an entity certified as a HIN would be considered to be an insurer, and a health insurance plan offered by or through such a HIN would be considered to be a health insurance plan offered by an insurer. Noncompliance of such a HIN or health insurance plan with parts B and C would be a basis for revocation or denial of recertification.

Limited Application of State Laws

Section 2154 would generally exempt HINs, their members, and insurers with whom they dealt on their members' behalf, from regulation under States laws (other than laws implementing title XXI) to the same extent a self-insured single sponsor plans would be exempt under ERISA. The sole exception would be State laws imposing premium taxes or other assessments on health insurance plans provided through HINs, to the extent that revenues from such taxes or assessments would be used to finance (or administer) a fund specifically designated to insure against the insolvency of insurers, or to fund (or administer) an insurance pool specifically designated to provide for health insurance coverage of above average risk individuals in the State.

Health Risk Pooling Demonstrations

Section 3 would permit the Secretary to fund health risk pooling demonstrations in as many as four States. The Secretary could develop model health risk pooling systems, and would develop methods for measuring the difference between the expected health care costs of particular individuals (based on diagnosis or other predictors of individual health care needs) and the expected health care costs of other individuals in the same demographic group (such as age and sex). A State could receive funding under this section only if its system met the requirements of proposed section 2116 of the Social Security Act (in section 2 of this bill). The Secretary would have to find that the State's proposed system was likely to achieve the goal of maximizing consumer choice while minimizing the selection of individuals based on individual health status. Appropriations of $20 million for each of the fiscal years 1994 through 1996 would be authorized.

Failure to Satisfy Certain Health Plan Requirements

Section 4 would provide that any insurer subject to Federal regulation pursuant to section 2103 is subject to an excise tax on any failure to comply with a requirement under part C of title XXI of the Social Security Act (as added by the bill), and an excise tax on any failure to comply with a requirement under part B of such title. The excise tax imposed on self insurers with a plan that fails to comply with part C would be $1,000 for each person covered by the insurer under plans subject to part C in the State in which the violation occurs. The tax on insurers that fail to comply with part B would be $1,000 for each person covered by the insurer under plans subject to part B in the State in which the violation occurs.

The excise tax would generally not apply if the violation could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence or if the violation were corrected within 30 days after it is discovered. In addition, the Secretary would be given authority (to be exercised in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services) to waive the tax if the violation were due to reasonable cause and not willful neglect to the extent payment of the tax would be excessive relative to the failure involved.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join the distinguished Republican leader in introducing two pieces of health care reform legislation on behalf of the administration. The first addresses the issues of small market insurance reform and health insurance purchasing groups. The second provides for 100 percent tax deductibility of health insurance costs for the self-employed.

While many of us have been focusing on significant health care reform for years, it is only recently that a widespread consensus has developed on the need for change, setting the stage for real action. In all levels of society, the message is clear: Despite the fact that we spend a greater percentage of our gross national product [GNP] on health care than any other country, there are approximately 37 million uninsured Americans; those who are insured are finding it increasingly difficult to pay for their coverage; and the resources of businesses and government alike are being consumed at an ever increasing rate by health care costs.

One might think, given this impetus, that we at the Federal level might be able to enact meaningful legislation in this area. Unfortunately, to this date, that has not been the case. Rather, all concerned parties have managed to turn health care reform into an election year political issue, thus producing a great deal of righteous rhetoric and finger pointing, but very little in the way of action.

Throughout this debate, I have argued that if both parties will concentrate on the extraordinary similarities that exist among the principal health reform proposals—submitted by the President, by the Senate Republican Health Care Task Force, which I have chaired for the past 2 years, by the Senate Democratic leadership, and by Senator BENTSEN, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee—we could enact significant legislation this calendar year which would slow the rate of growth in health care expenditures and increase overall access to health care.

I am delighted to say that recent events indicate that we are finally moving in that direction. Not long ago, the Republican leader and I met with the distinguished majority leader, Senator MITCHELL, and I was heartened by his desire to focus upon the vast common ground we all share rather than the differences among the various proposals. And by sending up these two bills, the President has improved the outlook for action.

While I do not agree with every single aspect of the President's proposals, as leader of the Republican Health Care Task Force, I believe it is extremely important to have the administration's ideas on the table as we begin our discussions.

Mr. President, it is clear that reforming our health care system is the most critical challenge facing our Nation in this decade. Our economic prosperity and our ability to control Federal spending hinge on whether we can solve the health care puzzle. But this will never be accomplished without bipartisan cooperation. I applaud the President for submitting his proposals and wholeheartedly welcome him aboard. Perhaps with everyone's participation and commitment to action, we will achieve something in which we can all take satisfaction.

S.J. Res. 304. A joint resolution designating January 3, 1993, through January 9, 1993, as "National Law Enforcement Training Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL LAW ENFORCEMENT TRAINING WEEK

• Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today, along with my colleague from Delaware, Senator BIDEN, a joint resolution to designate January 3, 1993 through January 9, 1993, as "National Law Enforcement Training Week."

The law enforcement personel of the Nation, at all levels, deserve and must have the best available training for their increasingly difficult jobs. We all know that the mission of those dedicated to training our law enforcement personnel is becoming increasingly important. Not only is crime on the rise, but the criminal of today is more violent and more sophisticated than ever before.

Law enforcement training is necessary to protect the lives of the people who are on the front lines of our country's fight against crime. At the same time, effective law enforcement training gives law enforcement personnel the skills necessary to better protect our citizens. Our communities deserve the best-trained law enforcement personnel that we can put into the field.

"National Law Enforcement Training Week" recognizes the efforts and contributions of those persons dedicated to assuring that the law enforcement personnel of this country are trained to win the fight against crime and to protect our citizens.

I urge my colleagues to show their support by cosponsoring National Law Enforcement Training Week.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 304

Whereas law enforcement training and the sciences related to law enforcement are critical to the immediate and long-term safety and well-being of this Nation because law enforcement professionals provide service and protection to citizens in all sectors of society;

Whereas law enforcement training is a critical component of national efforts to protect the citizens of this Nation from violent crime, to combat the malignancy of illicit drugs, and to apprehend criminals who commit personal, property, and business crimes;

Whereas law enforcement training serves the hard working and law abiding citizens of this Nation;

Whereas it is essential that the citizens of this Nation be able to enjoy an inherent right of freedom from fear and learn of the significant contributions that law enforcement trainers have made to assure such right;

Whereas it is vital to build and maintain a highly trained and motivated law enforcement work force that is educated and trained in the skills of law enforcement and the sciences related to law enforcement in order to take advantage of the opportunities that law enforcement provides;

Whereas it is in the national interest to stimulate and encourage the youth of this Nation to understand the significance of law enforcement training to the law enforcement profession and to the safety and security of all citizens;

Whereas it is in the national interest to encourage the youth of this Nation to appreciate the intellectual fascination of law enforcement training; and

Whereas it is in the national interest to make the youth of this Nation aware of career options available in law enforcement and disciplines related to law enforcement: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That January 3, 1993, through January 9, 1993, is designated as "National Law Enforcement Training Week". The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate exhibits, ceremonies, and activities, including programs designed to heighten the awareness of all citizens, particularly the youth of this Nation, of the importance of law enforcement training and related disciplines.•

S.J. Res. 305. Joint resolution to designate October 1992 as "Polish-American Heritage Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

POLISH-AMERICAN HERITAGE MONTH

• Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, today I am introducing a joint resolution to designate October 1992 as Polish-American Heritage Month, along with 23 of my colleagues. This resolution, as it has in the past, honors our Polish-Americans and celebrates the close ties between the United States and Poland.

Polish-Americans have been in the United States since the first settlement at Jamestown and now are a crucial piece of the American mosaic. Polish-Americans have always been noted for their hard work, academic achievement, and close family ties. This resolution recognizes the special achievements of all Polish-Americans.

As this joint resolution acknowledges the contributions of Polish-Americans to the United States, it also commemorates the country from which these valued immigrants came from. After many years of foreign domination, two world wars and the cold war, Poland is a phoenix rising from the ashes. Poland was the first Warsaw Pact country to hold free democratic elections and the first Communist country to move boldly ahead with democratic reforms. As Poles forge a new future in an unfamiliar and sometimes unstable world, the assistance we and other nations are extending will help all members of the world community. It will take years for Poland to overcome the destruction that communism left in their country, but if there is any group of people who can make something from nothing, it is the people of Poland.

By designating October 1992 as Polish-American Heritage Month, we in Congress show our appreciation to all Polish-Americans and assure the people of Poland of our continued support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution on Polish-American Heritage Month be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 305

Whereas the first Polish immigrants to North America were among the first settlers of Jamestown, Virginia, in the seventeenth century;

Whereas Kazimierz Pulaski, Tadeusz Koschiuszko, and other Poles came to the British colonies in America to fight in the Revolutionary War and to risk their lives and fortunes for the creation of the United States;

Whereas Poles and Americans of Polish descent have distinguished themselves by contribution to the development of arts, sciences, government, military service, athletics, and education in the United States;

Whereas, the Polish Constitution of May 3, 1791, was modeled directly on the Constitution of the United States, is recognized as the second written constitution in history, and is revered by Poles and Americans of Polish descent;

Whereas Poles and Americans of Polish descent take great pride and honor in the greatest son of Poland, his Holiness Pope John Paul the Second;

Whereas Poles and Americans of Polish descent and people everywhere applauded the efforts of Solidarity's leader and now President Lech Walesa in fighting for freedom, human rights, and economic reform in Poland;

Whereas the Polish American Congress is observing its forty-eighth anniversary this year and is celebrating October 1992 as "Polish-American Heritage Month": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That October 1992 is designated "Polish-American Heritage Month", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such a month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.•

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S.J. Res. 306. A joint resolution designating October 1992, as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ITALIAN-AMERICAN HERITAGE AND CULTURE MONTH

• Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a joint resolution proclaiming the month of October, 1992, as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month."

I can think of no better month to pay tribute to the people of this proud heritage than October. It was on October 12, 1492, that an Italian first set foot on this continent, the great explorer, Christopher Columbus. He discovered the New World and opened the door for worldwide immigration to this country. It was the famous Italian navigator, Amerigo Vespucci, that our Nation was named for.

Italians have also made countless contributions in every field of human endeavor. In the field of music, they have hailed such masters as Puccini, Verdi, Vivaldi, and Scarlatti; the literary world is blessed with the works of Dante; and the art world has the awe-inspiring works of Michaelangelo, Leonardo da Vinci, and Giotto. In the field of science, it was Marconi who made modern radio communications possible.

We can also take great pride in the accomplishments of the many outstanding men and women of Italian descent who have enriched our country and lives. New Yorkers will never forget Fiorello LaGuardia, who was the beloved mayor of New York City for 11 years. In 1986, Antonin Scalia was confirmed as an Associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court. Also, Enrico Fermi was the winner of the 1938 Nobel Prize for Physics. In the world of sports, we will never forget the immortal Joe DiMaggio.

As the grandson of Italian immigrants, I am proud of my heritage and cultural background. America is truly a melting pot of cultures and that is what makes our country so unique and great. For all of these reasons I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 306

Whereas Italians and Italian-Americans have contributed to the United States in all aspects of life, including art, science, civil service, military service, athletics, education, law, and politics;

Whereas Italian-Americans make up one of the largest ethnic groups in the United States;

Whereas in recognition of the accomplishments of Christopher Columbus, recognized as one of the greatest explorers in world history and the first to record the discovery of the Americas, a national observance day was established in October of every year;

Whereas 1992 is the quintcentennial commemoration of the historic voyage of Christopher Columbus to the Americas;

Whereas the phrase in the Declaration of Independence "All men are created equal," was suggested by the Italian patriot and immigrant Philip Mazzei;

Whereas the people of the United States take great pride in the accomplishments of the many outstanding men and women of Italian descent who have enriched our Nation's history such as Fiorello La Guardia, the beloved Mayor of New York City, and Enrico Fermi, who won the 1938 Nobel Prize in Physics;

Whereas Italy enjoys a rich cultural heritage and has given the world the great works of Dante, the Breathtaking art of Giotti and Michelangelo, and the inspirational music of Antonio Vivaldi and Domenico Scarlatti;

Whereas the Americas were named after the Italian explorer Amerigo Vespucci;

Whereas Guiseppe Verdi, one of the world's most renowned opera composers, was born October 10, 1813;

Whereas William Paca, an Italian-American, was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence; and

Whereas during October 1992 special attention will be directed at National, State, and local programs that promote Italian heritage and culture: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that October 1992 is designated as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month," the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.•

SENATE RESOLUTION 296—RELATING TO THE RESCUE OF THE INTELSAT VI SATELLITE

Mr. GARN (for himself, Mr. GLENN, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. GORE, and Mr. DOLE) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to as follows:

S. RES. 296

Whereas the crew of the Space Shuttle Endeavour has successfully completed its assignment to rendezvous, capture, and deploy the stranded INTELSAT VI telecommunications satellite;

Whereas the successful capture of the INTELSAT VI satellite represents the first simultaneous spacewalk by 3 astronauts in the history of manned space flight and is the 100th spacewalk in the history of both the United States and Soviet space programs;

Whereas the capture of the INTELSAT VI satellite involved both the longest spacewalk in the history of the United States space program and the first time 3 such spacewalks have been conducted on a single shuttle flight;

Whereas, in overcoming the initial malfunction of the capture device, the crew of the Endeavour, and the mission support teams, quickly conceived and designed an alternative strategy to secure the INTELSAT VI satellite utilizing Space Station Freedom structural components, which were readily deployed to serve as a base enabling the 3 astronauts to capture the satellite;

Whereas this mission brilliantly demonstrates the unique ability of astronauts to perform complex and challenging tasks in space with resourcefulness, ingenuity, and flexibility far beyond the capabilities of machines and other robotic devices; and

Whereas this flight of the Space Shuttle Endeavour is its maiden voyage as the latest addition to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's orbiter fleet which was fully funded in 1986, and was built and delivered as initially scheduled, under its estimated cost: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That—

(1) the Senate commends and congratulates the crew of the Space Shuttle Endeavour for their magnificient rescue of the INTELSAT VI satellite and for making the maiden voyage of this orbiter so memorable and successful; and

(2) the Secretary of the Senate is directed to deliver certified copies of this resolution to Daniel Goldin, Administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and to Daniel C. Brandenstein, Commander of the Space Shuttle Endeavour STS-49 mission crew.

SENATE RESOLUTION 297—AUTHORIZING TESTIMONY AND PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS BY AND REPRESENTATION OF AN EMPLOYEE OF THE SENATE

Mr. FORD (for Mr. Mitchell, for himself and Mr. Dole) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. Res. 297

Whereas, in the case of United States v. Charles E. Hughes, Sr., No. 3-91-00194, pending in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee, the United States Attorney has caused a subpoena for testimony and documents production at trial to be served upon Shannon Langlois, an employee of the Senate on the staff of Senator J. Bennett Johnston;

Whereas, pursuant to section 703(a) and 704(a)(2) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. §§288b(a) and 288c(a)(2), the Senate may direct its counsel to represent employees of the Senate with respect to any subpoena, order, or request for testimony relating to their official responsibilities;

Whereas, by the privileges of the Senate of the United States and Rules XI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, no evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate can, by administrative or judicial process, be taken from such control or possession but by permission of the Senate;

Whereas, when it appears that evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate is needed for the promotion of justice, the Senate will take such action as will promote the ends of justice consistent with the privileges of the Senate: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That Shannon Langlois is authorized to testify and to produce documents in United States v. Charles E. Hughes, Sr., except concerning matters for which a privilege should be asserted.

Sec. 2. That the Senate Legal Counsel is authorized to represent Shannon Langlois in connection with her testimony in United States v. Charles E. Hughes, Sr.

(b) Purposes.—The purposes of this Act are—

"(2) any matter relating to any aggravating factor listed in section 3592 for which notice has been provided under subsection (a) and (if information is presented relating to such a listed factor) any other aggravating factor for which notice has been so provided. The information presented may include the trial transcript and exhibits. Any other information relevant to such mitigating or aggravating factors may be presented by either the Government or the defendant. The information presented by the Government in support of factors concerning the effect of the offense on the victim and the victim's family may include oral testimony, a victim impact statement that identifies the victim of the offense and the nature and extent of harm and loss suffered by the victim and the victim's family, and other relevant information. Information is admissible regardless of its admissibility under the rules governing admission of evidence at criminal trials, except that information may be excluded if its probative value is outweighed by the danger of creating unfair prejudice, confusing the issues, or misleading the jury. The attorney for the Government and for the defendant shall be permitted to rebut any information received at the hearing, and shall be given fair opportunity to present argument as to the adequacy of the information to establish the existence of any aggravating or mitigating factor, and as to the appropriateness in that case of imposing a sentence of death. The attorney for the Government shall open the argument. The defendant shall be permitted to reply. The Government shall then be permitted to reply in rebuttal. The burden of establishing the existence of an aggravating factor is on the Government, and is not satisfied unless the existence of such a factor is established beyond a reasonable doubt. The burden of establishing the existence of any mitigating factor is on the defendant, and is not satisfied unless the existence of such a factor is established by a preponderance of the evidence.

"(d) RETURN OF SPECIAL FINDINGS.—The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider all the information received during the hearing. It shall return special findings identifying any aggravating factor or factors set forth in section 3592 found to exist and any other aggravating factor for which notice has been provided under subsection (a) found to exist. A finding with respect to a mitigating factor may be made by one or more members of the jury, and any member of the jury who finds the existence of a mitigating factor may consider such factor established for purposes of this section regardless of the number of jurors who concur that the factor has been established. A finding with respect to any aggravating factor must be unanimous. If no aggravating factor set forth in section 3592 is found to exist, the court shall impose a sentence other than death authorized by law.

"(e) RETURN OF A FINDING CONCERNING A SENTENCE OF DEATH.—If, in the case of—

"(1) an offense described in section 3591(1), an aggravating factor required to be considered under section 3592(b) is found to exist;

"(2) an offense described in section 3591 (2) or (6), an aggravating factor required to be considered under section 3592(c) is found to exist; or the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall then consider whether the aggravating factor or factors found to exist under subsection (d) outweigh any mitigating factor or factors. The jury, or if there is no jury, the court shall recommend a sentence of death if it unanimously finds at least one aggravating factor and no mitigating factor or if it finds one or more aggravating factors which outweigh any mitigating factors. In any other case, it shall not recommend a sentence of death. The jury shall be instructed that it must avoid any influence of sympathy, sentiment, passion, prejudice, or other arbitrary factors in its decision, and should make such a recommendation as the information warrants.

"(3) an offense described in section 3591 (3), (4), or (5), an aggravating factor required to be considered under section 3592(d) is found to exist,

"(f) SPECIAL PRECAUTION TO ASSURE AGAINST DISCRIMINATION.—In a hearing held before a jury, the court, prior to the return of a finding under subsection (e), shall instruct the jury that, in considering whether a sentence of death is justified, it shall not be influenced by prejudice or bias relating to the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or of any victim and that the jury is not to recommend a sentence of death unless it has concluded that it would recommend a sentence of death for the crime in question no matter what the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or of any victim may be. The jury, upon return of a finding under subsection (e), shall also return to the court a certificate, signed by each juror, that prejudice or bias relating to the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim was not involved in reaching his or her individual decision and that the individual juror would have made the same recommendation regarding a sentence for the crime in question no matter what the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim may be.

"§ 3594. Imposition of a sentence of death

"Upon the recommendation under section 3593(e) that a sentence of death be imposed, the court shall sentence the defendant to death. Otherwise the court shall impose a sentence, other than death, authorized by law. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if the maximum term of imprisonment for the offense is life imprisonment, the court may impose a sentence of life imprisonment without the possibility of release.

"§ 3595. Review of a sentence of death

"(a) APPEAL.—In a case in which a sentence of death is imposed, the sentence shall be subject to review by the court of appeals upon appeal by the defendant. Notice of appeal of the sentence must be filed within the time specified for the filing of a notice of appeal of the judgment of conviction. An appeal of the sentence under this section may be consolidated with an appeal of the judgment of conviction and shall have priority over all other cases.

"(b) REVIEW.—The court of appeals shall review the entire record in the case, including—

"(1) the evidence submitted during the trial;

"(2) the information submitted during the sentencing hearing;

"(3) the procedures employed in the sentencing hearing; and

"(4) the special findings returned under section 3593(d).

"(c) DECISION AND DISPOSITION.—

"(1) AFFIRMANCE.—If the court of appeals determines that—

"(A) the sentence of death was not imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor;

"(B) the evidence and information support the special findings of the existence of an aggravating factor or factors; and

"(C) the proceedings did not involve any other prejudicial error requiring reversal of the sentence that was properly preserved for and raised on appeal, it shall affirm the sentence.

"(2) REMAND.—In a case in which the sentence is not affirmed under paragraph (1), the court of appeals shall remand the case for reconsideration under section 3593 or for imposition of another authorized sentence as appropriate, except that the court shall not reverse a sentence of death on the ground that an aggravating factor was invalid or was not supported by the evidence and information if at least one aggravating factor required to be considered under section 3592 remains which was found to exist and the court, on the basis of the evidence submitted at trial and the information submitted at the sentencing hearing, finds no mitigating factor or finds that the remaining aggravating factor or factors which were found to exist outweigh any mitigating factors.

"(3) STATEMENT OF REASONS.—The court of appeals shall state in writing the reasons for its disposition of an appeal of a sentence of death under this section.

"§ 3596. Implementation of a sentence of death

"(a) IN GENERAL.—A person who has been sentenced to death pursuant to this chapter shall be committed to the custody of the Attorney General until exhaustion of the procedures for appeal of the judgment of conviction and for review of the sentence. When the sentence is to be implemented, the Attorney General shall release the person sentenced to death to the custody of a United States Marshal, who shall supervise implementation of the sentence in the manner prescribed by the law of the State in which the sentence is imposed. If the law of such State does not provide for implementation of a sentence of death, the court shall designate another State, the law of which does so provide, and the sentence shall be implemented in the manner prescribed by such law.

"(b) SPECIAL BARS TO EXECUTION.—A sentence of death shall not be carried out upon a person who lacks the mental capacity to understand the death penalty and why it was imposed on that person, or upon a woman while she is pregnant.

"(c) EMPLOYEES MAY DECLINE TO PARTICIPATE.—No employee of any State department of corrections, the Federal Bureau of Prisons, or the United States Marshals Service, and no employee providing services to that department, bureau, or service under contract shall be required, as a condition of that employment or contractual obligation, to be in attendance at or to participate in any execution carried out under this section if such participation is contrary to the moral or religious convictions of the employee. For purposes of this subsection, the term 'participate in any execution' includes personal preparation of the condemned individual and the apparatus used for the execution, and supervision of the activities of other personnel in carrying out such activities.

"§ 3597. Use of State facilities

"A United States Marshal charged with supervising the implementation of a sentence of death may use appropriate State or local facilities for the purpose, may use the services of an appropriate State or local official or of a person such an official employs for the purpose, and shall pay the costs thereof in an amount approved by the Attorney General.

"§ 3598. Appointment of counsel

"(a) REPRESENTATION OF INDIGENT DEFENDANTS.—This section shall govern the appointment of counsel for any defendant against whom a sentence of death is sought, or on whom a sentence of death has been imposed, for an offense against the United States, where the defendant is or becomes financially unable to obtain adequate representation. Such a defendant shall be entitled to appointment of counsel from the commencement of trial proceedings until one of the conditions specified in section 3599(b) has occurred. This section shall not affect the appointment of counsel and the provision of ancillary legal services under section 408(q) (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), (9), and (10) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 848 (q) (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), (9), and (10)).

"(b) REPRESENTATION BEFORE FINALITY OF JUDGMENT.—A defendant within the scope of this section shall have counsel appointed for trial representation as provided in section 3005. At least 1 counsel so appointed shall continue to represent the defendant until the conclusion of direct review of the judgment, unless replaced by the court with other qualified counsel.

"(c) REPRESENTATION AFTER FINALITY OF JUDGMENT.—When a judgment imposing a sentence of death has become final through affirmance by the Supreme Court on direct review, denial of certiorari by the Supreme Court on direct review, or expiration of the time for seeking direct review in the court of appeals or the Supreme Court, the Government shall promptly notify the district court that imposed the sentence. Within 10 days after receipt of such notice, the district court shall proceed to make a determination whether the defendant is eligible under this section for appointment of counsel for subsequent proceedings. On the basis of the determination, the court shall issue an order—

"(1) appointing 1 or more counsel to represent the defendant upon a finding that the defendant is financially unable to obtain adequate representation and wishes to have counsel appointed or is unable competently to decide whether to accept or reject appointment of counsel;

"(2) finding, after a hearing if necessary, that the defendant rejected appointment of counsel and made the decision with an understanding of its legal consequences; or

"(3) denying the appointment of counsel upon a finding that the defendant is financially able to obtain adequate representation.

Counsel appointed pursuant to this subsection shall be different from the counsel who represented the defendant at trial and on direct review unless the defendant and counsel request a continuation or renewal of the earlier representation.

"(d) STANDARDS FOR COMPETENCE OF COUNSEL.—In relation to a defendant who is entitled to appointment of counsel under this section, at least 1 counsel appointed for trial representation must have been admitted to the bar for at least 5 years and have at least 3 years of experience in the trial of felony cases in the federal district courts. If new counsel is appointed after judgment, at least 1 counsel so appointed must have been admitted to the bar for at least 5 years and have at least 3 years of experience in the litigation of felony cases in the Federal courts of appeals or the Supreme Court. The court, for good cause, may appoint counsel who does not meet the standards prescribed in the 2 preceding sentences, but whose background, knowledge, or experience would otherwise enable him or her to properly represent the defendant, with due consideration of the seriousness of the penalty and the nature of the litigation.

"(f) CLAIMS OF INEFFECTIVENESS OF COUNSEL.—The ineffectiveness or incompetence of counsel during proceedings on a motion under section 2255 of title 28 in a capital case shall not be a ground for relief from the judgment or sentence in any proceeding. This limitation shall not preclude the appointment of different counsel at any stage of the proceedings.

"§ 3599. Collateral attack on judgment imposing sentence of death

"(a) TIME FOR MAKING SECTION 2255 MOTION.—In a case in which a sentence of death has been imposed, and the judgment has become final as described in section 3598(c), a motion in the case under section 2255 of title 28 shall be filed within 90 days of the issuance of the order relating to appointment of counsel under section 3598(c). The court in which the motion is filed, for good cause shown, may extend the time for filing for a period not exceeding 60 days. A motion described in this section shall have priority over all noncapital matters in the district court, and in the court of appeals on review of the district court's decision.

"(b) STAY OF EXECUTION.—The execution of a sentence of death shall be stayed in the course of direct review of the judgment and during the litigation of an initial motion in the case under section 2255 of title 28. The stay shall run continuously following imposition of the sentence, and shall expire if—

"(1) the defendant fails to file a motion under section 2255 of title 28 within the time specified in subsection (a), or fails to make a timely application for court of appeals review following the denial of such a motion by a district court;

"(2) upon completion of district court and court of appeals review under section 2255 of title 28, the motion under that section is denied and—

"(A) the time for filing a petition for certiorari has expired and no petition has been filed;

"(B) a timely petition for certiorari was filed and the Supreme Court denied the petition; or

"(C) a timely petition for certiorari was filed and upon consideration of the case, the Supreme Court disposed of it in a manner that left the capital sentence undisturbed; or

"(3) before a district court, in the presence of counsel and after having been advised of the consequences of the decision to do so, the defendant waives the right to file a motion under section 2255 of title 28.

"(c) FINALITY OF DECISION ON REVIEW.—If one of the conditions specified in subsection (b) has occurred, no court thereafter shall have the authority to enter a stay of execution or grant relief in the case unless—

"(1) the basis for the stay and request for relief is a claim not presented in earlier proceedings;

"(2) the failure to raise the claim was—

"(A) the result of governmental action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States;

"(B) the result of the Supreme Court recognition of a new Federal right that is retroactively applicable; or

"(C) based on a factual predicate that could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence in time to present the claim in earlier proceedings; and

"(3) the facts underlying the claim would be sufficient, if proven, to undermine the court's confidence in the determination of guilt on the offense or offenses for which the death penalty was imposed.

"§ 3600. Application in Indian country

"Notwithstanding sections 1152 and 1153, no person subject to the criminal jurisdiction of an Indian tribal government shall be subject to a capital sentence under this chapter for any offense the Federal jurisdiction for which is predicated solely on Indian country as defined in section 1151 and which has occurred within the boundaries of such Indian country, unless the governing body of the tribe has made an election that this chapter have effect over land and persons subject to its criminal jurisdiction.".

"(1) MENTAL CAPACITY.—The defendant's mental capacity to appreciate the wrongfulness of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of law was significantly impaired.

"(2) DURESS.—The defendant was under unusual and substantial duress.

"(3) PARTICIPATION IN OFFENSE MINOR.—The defendant is punishable as a principal (pursuant to section 2 of this title) in the offense, which was committed by another, but the defendant's participation was relatively minor.

"(e) AGGRAVATING FACTORS.—In determining whether to recommend a sentence of death, the jury shall consider any aggravating factor for which notice has been provided under subsection (f), including the following factors—

"(1) KILLING IN FURTHERANCE OF DRUG TRAFFICKING.—The defendant engaged in the conduct resulting in death in the course of or in furtherance of drug trafficking activity.

"(2) KILLING IN THE COURSE OF OTHER SERIOUS VIOLENT CRIMES.—The defendant engaged in the conduct resulting in death in the course of committing or attempting to commit an offense involving robbery, burglary, sexual abuse, kidnaping, or arson.

"(3) MULTIPLE KILLINGS OR ENDANGERMENT OF OTHERS.—The defendant committed more than one offense under this section, or in committing the offense knowingly created a grave risk of death to one or more persons in addition to the victim of the offense.

"(4) INVOLVEMENT OF FIREARM.—During and in relation to the commission of the offense, the defendant used or possessed a firearm as defined in section 921 of this title.

"(5) PREVIOUS CONVICTION OF VIOLENT FELONY.—The defendant has previously been convicted of an offense punishable by a term of imprisonment of more than one year that involved the use or attempted or threatened use of force against a person or that involved sexual abuse.

"(6) KILLING WHILE INCARCERATED OR UNDER SUPERVISION.—The defendant at the time of the offense was confined in or had escaped from a jail, prison, or other correctional or detention facility, was on pre-trial release, or was on probation, parole, supervised release, or other post-conviction conditional release.

"(8) PROCUREMENT OF THE OFFENSE BY PAYMENT.—The defendant procured the commission of the offense by payment, or promise of payment, of anything of pecuniary value.

"(9) COMMISSION OF THE OFFENSE FOR PECUNIARY GAIN.—The defendant committed the offense as consideration for receiving, or in the expectation of receiving or obtaining, anything of pecuniary value.

"(10) SUBSTANTIAL PLANNING AND PREMEDITATION.—The defendant committed the offense after substantial planning and premeditation.

"(11) VULNERABILITY OF VICTIM.—The victim was particularly vulnerable due to old age, youth, or infirmity.

"(12) KILLING OF PUBLIC SERVANT.—The defendant committed the offense against a public servant—

"(i) while such public servant was engaged in the performance of his or her official duties;

"(ii) because of the performance of such public servant's official duties; or

"(iii) because of such public servant's status as a public servant.

"(13) KILLING TO INTERFERE WITH OR RETALIATE AGAINST WITNESS.—The defendant committed the offense in order to prevent or inhibit any person from testifying or providing information concerning an offense, or to retaliate against any person for testifying or providing such information.

"(f) NOTICE OF INTENT TO SEEK DEATH PENALTY.—If the government intends to seek the death penalty for an offense under this section, the attorney for the government shall file with the court and serve on the defendant a notice of such intent. The notice shall be provided a reasonable time before the trial or acceptance of a guilty plea, or at such later time as the court may permit for good cause. The notice shall set forth the aggravating factor or factors set forth in subsection (e) and any other aggravating factor or factors that the government will seek to prove as the basis for the death penalty. The factors for which notice is provided under this subsection may include factors concerning the effect of the offense on the victim and the victim's family. The court may permit the attorney for the government to amend the notice upon a showing of good cause.

"(g) JUDGE AND JURY AT CAPITAL SENTENCING HEARING.—A hearing to determine whether the death penalty will be imposed for an offense under this section shall be conducted by the judge who presided at trial or accepted a guilty plea, or by another judge if that judge is not available. The hearing shall be conducted before the jury that determined the defendant's guilt if that jury is available. A new jury shall be impaneled for the purpose of the hearing if the defendant pleaded guilty, the trial of guilt was conducted without a jury, the jury that determined the defendant's guilt was discharged for good cause, or reconsideration of the sentence is necessary after the initial imposition of a sentence of death. A jury impaneled under this subsection shall have twelve members unless the parties stipulate to a lesser number at any time before the conclusion of the hearing with the approval of the judge. Upon motion of the defendant, with the approval of the attorney for the government, the hearing shall be carried out before the judge without a jury. If there is no jury, references to 'the jury' in this section, where applicable, shall be understood as referring to the judge.

"(h) PROOF OF MITIGATING AND AGGRAVATING FACTORS.—No presentence report shall be prepared if a capital sentencing hearing is held under this section. Any information relevant to the existence of mitigating factors, or to the existence of aggravating factors for which notice has been provided under subsection (f), may be presented by either the government or the defendant, regardless of its admissibility under the rules governing the admission of evidence at criminal trials, except that information may be excluded if its probative value is outweighed by the danger of creating unfair prejudice, confusing the issues, or misleading the jury. The information presented may include trial transcripts and exhibits. The attorney for the government and for the defendant shall be permitted to rebut any information received at the hearing, and shall be given fair opportunity to present argument as to the adequacy of the information to establish the existence of any aggravating or mitigating factor, and as to the appropriateness in that case of imposing a sentence of death. The attorney for the government shall open the argument, the defendant shall be permitted to reply, and the government shall then be permitted to reply in rebuttal.

"(i) FINDINGS OF AGGRAVATING AND MITIGATING FACTORS.—The jury shall return special findings identifying any aggravating factor or factors for which notice has been provided under subsection (f) and which the jury unanimously determines have been established by the government beyond a reasonable doubt. A mitigating factor is established if the defendant has proven its existence by a preponderance of the evidence, and any member of the jury who finds the existence of such a factor may regard it as established for purposes of this section regardless of the number of jurors who concur that the factor has been established.

"(j) FINDING CONCERNING A SENTENCE OF DEATH.—If the jury specially finds under subsection (i) that one or more aggravating factors set forth in subsection (e) exist, and the jury further finds unanimously that there are no mitigating factors or that the aggravating factor or factors specially found under subsection (i) outweigh any mitigating factors, then the jury shall recommend a sentence of death. In any other case, the jury shall not recommend a sentence of death. The jury shall be instructed that it must avoid any influence of sympathy, sentiment, passion, prejudice, or other arbitrary factors in its decision, and should make such a recommendation as the information warrants.

"(k) SPECIAL PRECAUTION TO ASSURE AGAINST DISCRIMINATION.—In a hearing held before a jury, the court, before the return of a finding under subsection (j), shall instruct the jury that, in considering whether to recommend a sentence of death, it shall not consider the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim, and that the jury is not to recommend a sentence of death unless it has concluded that it would recommend a sentence of death for such a crime regardless of the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim. The jury, upon the return of a finding under subsection (j), shall also return to the court a certificate, signed by each juror, that the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim did not affect the juror's individual decision and that the individual juror would have recommended the same sentence for such a crime regardless of the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim.

"(l) IMPOSITION OF A SENTENCE OF DEATH.—Upon a recommendation under subsection (j) that a sentence of death be imposed, the court shall sentence the defendant to death. Otherwise the court shall impose a sentence, other than death, authorized by law.

"(m) REVIEW OF A SENTENCE OF DEATH.—

"(1) The defendant may appeal a sentence of death under this section by filing a notice of appeal of the sentence within the time provided for filing a notice of appeal of the judgment of conviction. An appeal of a sentence under this subsection may be consolidated within an appeal of the judgment of conviction and shall have priority over all noncapital matters in the court of appeals.

"(2) The court of appeals shall review the entire record in the case including the evidence submitted at trial and information submitted during the sentencing hearing, the procedures employed in the sentencing hearing, and the special findings returned under subsection (i). The court of appeals shall uphold the sentence if it determines that the sentence of death was not imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor, that the evidence and information support the special findings under subsection (i), and that the proceedings were otherwise free of prejudicial error that was properly preserved for review.

"(3) In any other case, the court of appeals shall remand the case for reconsideration of the sentence or imposition of another authorized sentence as appropriate, except that the court shall not reverse a sentence of death on the ground that an aggravating factor was invalid or was not supported by the evidence and information if at least one aggravating factor described in subsection (e) remains which was found to exist and the court, on the basis of the evidence submitted at trial and the information submitted at the sentencing hearing, finds that the remaining aggravating factor or factors which were found to exist outweigh any mitigating factors. The court of appeals shall state in writing the reasons for its disposition of an appeal of a sentence of death under this section.

"(n) IMPLEMENTATION OF SENTENCE OF DEATH.—A person sentenced to death under this section shall be committed to the custody of the Attorney General until exhaustion of the procedures for appeal of the judgment of conviction and review of the sentence. When the sentence is to be implemented, the Attorney General shall release the person sentenced to death to the custody of a United States Marshal. The Marshal shall supervise implementation of the sentence in the manner prescribed by the law of a State designated by the court. The Marshal may use State or local facilities, may use the services of an appropriate State or local official or of a person such an official employs, and shall pay the costs thereof in an amount approved by the Attorney General.

"(o) SPECIAL BAR TO EXECUTION.—A sentence of death shall not be carried out upon a woman while she is pregnant.

"(p) CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTION TO PARTICIPATION IN EXECUTION.—No employee of any State department of corrections, the United States Marshals Service, or the Federal Bureau of Prisons, and no person providing services to that department, service, or bureau under contract shall be required, as a condition of that employment or contractual obligation, to be in attendance at or to participate in any execution carried out under this section if such participation is contrary to the moral or religious convictions of the employee. For purposes of this subsection, the term 'participate in any execution' includes personal preparation of the condemned individual and the apparatus used for the execution, and supervision of the activities of other personnel in carrying out such activities.

"(q) APPOINTMENT OF COUNSEL FOR INDIGENT CAPITAL DEFENDANTS.—A defendant against whom a sentence of death is sought, or on whom a sentence of death has been imposed, under this section, shall be entitled to appointment of counsel from the commencement of trial proceedings until one of the conditions specified in subsection (v) has occurred, if the defendant is or becomes financially unable to obtain adequate representation. Counsel shall be appointed for trial representation as provided in section 3005 of this title, and at least one counsel so appointed shall continue to represent the defendant until the conclusion of direct review of the judgment, unless replaced by the court with other qualified counsel. Except as otherwise provided in this section, the provisions of section 3006A of this title shall apply to appointments under this section.

"(r) REPRESENTATION AFTER FINALITY OF JUDGMENT.—When a judgment imposing a sentence of death under this section has become final through affirmance by the Supreme Court on direct review, denial of certiorari by the Supreme Court on direct review, or expiration of the time for seeking direct review in the court of appeals or the Supreme Court, the government shall promptly notify the court that imposed the sentence. The court, within 10 days of receipt of such notice, shall proceed to make determination whether the defendant is eligible for appointment of counsel for subsequent proceedings. The court shall issue an order appointing one or more counsel to represent the defendant upon a finding that the defendant is financially unable to obtain adequate representation and wishes to have counsel appointed or is unable competently to decide whether to accept or reject appointment of counsel. The court shall issue an order denying appointment of counsel upon a finding that the defendant is financially able to obtain adequate representation or that the defendant rejected appointment of counsel with an understanding of the consequences of that decision. Counsel appointed pursuant to this subsection shall be different from the counsel who represented the defendant at trial and on direct review unless the defendant and counsel request a continuation or renewal of the earlier representation.

"(s) STANDARDS FOR COMPETENCE OF COUNSEL.—In relation to a defendant who is entitled to appointment of counsel under subsections (q)-(r), at least one counsel appointed for trial representation must have been admitted to the bar for at least 5 years and have at least three years of experience in the trial of felony cases in the Federal district courts. If new counsel is appointed after judgment, at least one counsel so appointed must have been admitted to the bar for at least 5 years and have at least 3 years of experience in the litigation of felony cases in the Federal courts of appeals or the Supreme Court. The court, for good cause, may appoint counsel who does not meet these standards, but whose background, knowledge, or experience would otherwise enable him or her to properly represent the defendant, with due consideration of the seriousness of the penalty and the nature of the litigation.

"(t) Claims of Ineffectiveness of Counsel in Collateral Proceedings.—The ineffectiveness or incompetence of counsel during proceedings on a motion under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code, in a case under this section shall not be a ground for relief from the judgment or sentence in any proceeding. This limitation shall not preclude the appointment of different counsel at any stage of the proceedings.

"(u) Time For Collateral Attack on Death Sentence.—A motion under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code, attacking a sentence of death under this section, or the conviction on which it is predicated, must be filed within 90 days of the issuance of the order under subsection (r) appointing or denying the appointment of counsel for such proceedings. The court in which the motion is filed, for good cause shown, may extend the time for filing for a period not exceeding 60 days. Such a motion shall have priority over all non-capital matters in the district court, and in the court of appeals on review of the district court's decision.

"(v) Stay of Execution.—The execution of a sentence of death under this section shall be stayed in the course of direct review of the judgment and during the litigation of an initial motion in the case under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code. The stay shall run continuously following imposition of the sentence and shall expire if—

"(3) before a district court, in the presence of counsel and after having been advised of the consequences of such a decision, the defendant waives the right to file a motion under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code.

"(w) Finality of the Decision on Review.—If one of the conditions specified in subsection (v) has occurred, no court thereafter shall have the authority to enter a stay of execution or grant relief in the case unless—

"(1) the basis for the stay and request for relief is a claim not presented in earlier proceedings;

"(2) the failure to raise the claim is the result of governmental action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States, the result of the Supreme Court's recognition of a new Federal right that is retroactively applicable, or the result of the fact that the factual predicate of the claim could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence in time to present the claim in earlier proceedings; and

"(3) the facts underlying the claim would be sufficient, if proven, to undermine the court's confidence in the determination of guilt on the offense or offenses for which the death penalty was imposed.

Subtitle B—Death Penalty Litigation Procedures

SEC. 211. SHORT TITLE FOR SUBTITLE B.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Death Penalty Litigation Procedures Act of 1992".

SEC. 212. DEATH PENALTY LITIGATION PROCEDURES.

(a) Addition of Chapter to Title 28, United States Code.—Title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 153 the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 154—SPECIAL HABEAS CORPUS PROCEDURES IN CAPITAL CASES

"Sec.
"2256. Prisoners in State custody subject to capital sentence; appointment of counsel; requirement of rule of court or statute; procedures for appointment.
"2258. Filing of habeas corpus petition; time requirements; tolling rules.
"2260. Certificate of probable cause inapplicable.
"2261. Application to state unitary review procedures.
"2262. Limitation periods for determining petitions.
"2263. Rule of construction.

"§2256. Prisoners in State custody subject to capital sentence; appointment of counsel; requirement of rule of court or statute; procedures for appointment

"(a) Application of Chapter.—This chapter shall apply to cases arising under section 2254 brought by prisoners in State custody who are subject to a capital sentence. It shall apply only if the provisions of subsections (b) and (c) are satisfied.

"(b) Establishment of Appointment Mechanism.—This chapter is applicable if a State establishes by rule of its court of last resort or by statute a mechanism for the appointment, compensation and payment of reasonable litigation expenses of competent counsel in State postconviction proceedings brought by indigent prisoners whose capital convictions and sentences have been upheld on direct appeal to the court of last resort in the State or have otherwise become final for State law purposes. The rule of court or statute must provide standards of competency for the appointment of such counsel.

"(c) Offer of Counsel.—Any mechanism for the appointment, compensation and reimbursement of counsel as provided in subsection (b) must offer counsel to all State prisoners under capital sentence and must provide for the entry of an order by a court of record—

"(1) appointing 1 or more counsel to represent the prisoner upon a finding that the prisoner is indigent and accepted the offer or is unable competently to decide whether to accept or reject the offer;

"(2) finding, after a hearing if necessary, that the prisoner rejected the offer of counsel and made the decision with an understanding of its legal consequences; or

"(3) denying the appointment of counsel upon a finding that the prisoner is not indigent.

"(d) Previous Representation.—No counsel appointed pursuant to subsections (b) and (c) to represent a State prisoner under capital sentence shall have previously represented the prisoner at trial or on direct appeal in the case for which the appointment is made unless the prisoner and counsel expressly request continued representation.

"(e) No Ground for Relief.—The ineffectiveness or incompetence of counsel during State or Federal collateral postconviction proceedings in a capital case shall not be a ground for relief in a proceeding arising under section 2254. This limitation shall not preclude the appointment of different counsel, on the court's own motion or at the request of the prisoner, at any phase of State or Federal postconviction proceedings on the basis of the ineffectiveness or incompetence of counsel in such proceedings.

"§2257. Mandatory stay of execution; duration; limits on stays of execution; successive petitions

"(a) Stay.—Upon the entry in the appropriate State court of record of an order under section 2256(c), a warrant or order setting an execution date for a State prisoner shall be stayed upon application to any court that would have jurisdiction over any proceedings filed under section 2254. The application must recite that the State has invoked the postconviction review procedures of this chapter and that the scheduled execution is subject to stay.

"(b) Expiration of Stay.—A stay of execution granted pursuant to subsection (a) shall expire if—

"(1) a State prisoner fails to file a habeas corpus petition under section 2254 within the time required in section 2258, or fails to make a timely application for court of appeals review following the denial of such a petition by a district court;

"(2) upon completion of district court and court of appeals review under section 2254 the petition for relief is denied and—

"(A) the time for filing a petition for certiorari has expired and no petition has been filed;

"(B) a timely petition for certiorari was filed and the Supreme Court denied the petition; or

"(C) a timely petition for certiorari was filed and upon consideration of the case, the Supreme Court disposed of it in a manner that left the capital sentence undisturbed; or

"(3) before a court of competent jurisdiction, in the presence of counsel and after having been advised of the consequences of his decision, a State prisoner under capital sentence waives the right to pursue habeas corpus review under section 2254.

"(c) Limitation on Further Stay.—If one of the conditions in subsection (b) has occurred, no Federal court thereafter shall have the authority to enter a stay of execution or grant relief in a capital case unless—

"(1) the basis for the stay and request for relief is a claim not previously presented in the State or Federal courts;

"(2) the failure to raise the claim is—

"(A) the result of State action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States;

"(B) the result of the Supreme Court recognition of a new Federal right that is retroactively applicable; or

"(C) based on a factual predicate that could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence in time to present the claim for State or Federal postconviction review; and

"(3) the facts underlying the claim would be sufficient, if proven, to undermine the court's confidence in the determination of guilt on the offense or offenses for which the death penalty was imposed.

"§2258. Filing of habeas corpus petition; time requirements; tolling rules

"Any petition for habeas corpus relief under section 2254 must be filed in the appropriate district court within 180 days from the filing in the appropriate State court of record of an order under section 2256(c). The time requirements established by this section shall be tolled—

"(1) from the date that a petition for certiorari is filed in the Supreme Court until the date of final disposition of the petition if a State prisoner files the petition to secure review by the Supreme Court of the affirmance of a capital sentence on direct review by the court of last resort of the State or other final State court decision on direct review;

"(2) during any period in which a State prisoner under capital sentence has a properly filed request for postconviction review pending before a State court of competent jurisdiction; if all State filing rules are met in a timely manner, this period shall run continuously from the date that the State prisoner initially files for postconviction review until final disposition of the case by the highest court of the State, but the time requirements established by this section are not tolled during the pendency of a petition for certiorari before the Supreme Court except as provided in paragraph (1); and

"(3) during an additional period not to exceed 60 days, if—

"(A) a motion for an extension of time is filed in the Federal district court that would have proper jurisdiction over the case upon the filing of a habeas corpus petition under section 2254; and

"(B) a showing of good cause is made for the failure to file the habeas corpus petition within the time period established by this section.

"§2259. Evidentiary hearings; scope of Federal review; district court adjudication

"(a) REVIEW OF RECORD; HEARING.—Whenever a State prisoner under a capital sentence files a petition for habeas corpus relief to which this chapter applies, the district court shall—

"(1) determine the sufficiency of the record for habeas corpus review based on the claims actually presented and litigated in the State courts except when the prisoner can show that the failure to raise or develop a claim in the State courts is—

"(A) the result of State action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States;

"(B) the result of the Supreme Court recognition of a new Federal right that is retroactively applicable; or

"(C) based on a factual predicate that could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence in time to present the claim for State postconviction review; and

"(2) conduct any requested evidentiary hearing necessary to complete the record for habeas corpus review.

"(b) ADJUDICATION.—Upon the development of a complete evidentiary record, the district court shall rule on the claims that are properly before it, but the court shall not grant relief from a judgment of conviction or sentence on the basis of any claim that was fully and fairly adjudicated in State proceedings.

"§2260. Certificate of probable cause inapplicable

"The requirement of a certificate of probable cause in order to appeal from the district court to the court of appeals does not apply to habeas corpus cases subject to this chapter except when a second or successive petition is filed.

"§2261. Application to State unitary review procedure

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'unitary review procedure' means a State procedure that authorizes a person under sentence of death to raise, in the course of direct review of the judgment, such claims as could be raised on collateral attack. This chapter shall apply, as provided in this section, in relation to a State unitary review procedure if the State establishes by rule of its court of last resort or by statute a mechanism for the appointment, compensation, and payment of reasonable litigation expenses of competent counsel in the unitary review proceedings, including expenses relating to the litigation of collateral claims in the proceedings. The rule of court or statute must provide standards of competency for the appointment of such counsel.

"(b) OFFER OF COUNSEL.—A unitary review procedure, to qualify under this section, must include an offer of counsel following trial for the purpose of representation on unitary review, and entry of an order, as provided in section 2256(c), concerning appointment of counsel or waiver or denial of appointment of counsel for that purpose. No counsel appointed to represent the prisoner in the unitary review proceedings shall have previously represented the prisoner at trial in the case for which the appointment is made unless the prisoner and counsel expressly request continued representation.

"(c) APPLICATION OF OTHER SECTIONS.—Sections 2257, 2258, 2259, 2260, and 2262 shall apply in relation to cases involving a sentence of death from any State having a unitary review procedure that qualifies under this section. References to State 'post-conviction review' and 'direct review' in those sections shall be understood as referring to unitary review under the State procedure. The references in sections 2257(a) and 2258 to 'an order under section 2256(c)' shall be understood as referring to the post-trial order under subsection (b) concerning representation in the unitary review proceedings, but if a transcript of the trial proceedings is unavailable at the time of the filing of such an order in the appropriate State court, the start of the 180-day limitation period under section 2258 shall be deferred until a transcript is made available to the prisoner or the prisoner's counsel.

"§2262. Limitation periods for determining petitions

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The adjudication of any petition under section 2254 that is subject to this chapter, and the adjudication of any motion under section 2255 by a person under sentence of death, shall be given priority by the district court and by the court of appeals over all noncapital matters. The adjudication of such a petition or motion shall be subject to the following time limitations:

"(1) A Federal district court shall determine such a petition or motion within 110 days of filing.

"(2)(A) The court of appeals shall hear and determine any appeal relating to such a petition or motion within 90 days after the notice of appeal is filed.

"(B) The court of appeals shall decide any application for rehearing en banc within 20 days of the filing of the application unless a responsive pleading is required, in which case the court of appeals shall decide the application within 20 days of the filing of the responsive pleading. If en banc consideration is granted, the en banc court shall determine the appeal within 90 days of the decision to grant such consideration.

"(3) The Supreme Court shall act on any application for a writ of certiorari relating to such a petition or motion within 90 days after the application is filed.

"(b) APPLICATION OF SECTION.—The time limitations under subsection (a) shall apply to an initial petition or motion, and to any second or successive petition or motion. The same limitations shall also apply to the redetermination of a petition or motion or related appeal following a remand by the court of appeals or the Supreme Court for further proceedings, and in such a case the limitation period shall run from the date of the remand.

"(c) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—The time limitations under this section shall not be construed to entitle a petitioner or movant to a stay of execution, to which the petitioner or movant would otherwise not be entitled, for the purpose of litigating any petition, motion, or appeal.

"(d) NO GROUND FOR RELIEF.—The failure of a court to meet or comply with the time limitations under this section shall not be a ground for granting relief from a judgment of conviction or sentence. The State or Government may enforce the time limitations under this section by applying to the court of appeals or the Supreme Court for a writ of mandamus.

"(e) REPORT.—The Administrative Office of the United States Courts shall report annually to Congress on the compliance by the courts with the time limits established in this section.

"§2263. Rule of construction

"This chapter shall be construed to promote the expeditious conduct and conclusion of State and Federal court review in capital cases.".

Subtitle D—National Child Protection Act

SEC. 741. SHORT TITLE.

SEC. 742. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) more than 2,500,000 reports of suspected child abuse and neglect are made each year, and increases have occurred in recent years in the abuse of children by persons who have previously committed crimes of child abuse or other serious crimes;

(2) although the great majority of child care providers are caring and dedicated professionals, child abusers and others who harm or prey on children frequently seek employment in or volunteer for positions that give them access to children;

(3) nearly 6,000,000 children received day care in 1990, and this total is growing rapidly to an estimated 8,000,000 children by 1995;

(4) exposure to child abusers and others who harm or prey on children is harmful to the physical and emotional well-being of children;

(5) there is no reliable, centralized national source through which child care organizations may obtain the benefit of a nationwide criminal background check on persons who provide or seek to provide child care;

(6) some States maintain automated criminal background files and provide criminal history information to child care organizations on persons who provide or seek to provide child care; and

(7) because State and national criminal justice databases are inadequate to permit effective national background checks, persons convicted of crimes of child abuse or other serious crimes may gain employment at a child care organization.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to establish a national system through which child care organizations may obtain the benefit of a nationwide criminal background check to determine if persons who are current or prospective child care providers have committed child abuse crimes or other serious crimes;

(2) to establish minimum criteria for State laws and procedures that permit child care organizations to obtain the benefit of nationwide criminal background checks to determine if persons who are current or prospective child care providers have committed child abuse crimes or other serious crimes;

(3) to provide procedural rights for persons who are subject to nationwide criminal background checks, including procedures to challenge and correct inaccurate background check information;

Upon the return of a recommendation of a sentence of death, the jury shall also return a certificate, signed by each juror, that the juror's individual decision was not affected by prejudice or bias relating to the race or color of the defendant or victim, and that the individual juror would have made the same recommendation regardless of the race or color of the defendant or victim.

(B) meet the requirements for admission as a trainee of the State or local police force to which the participant will be assigned pursuant to the State Police Corps plan, including achievement of satisfactory scores on any applicable examination, except that failure to meet the age requirement for a trainee of the State or local police shall not disqualify the applicant if the applicant will be of sufficient age upon completing an undergraduate course of study;

(3) It is the intent of this subchapter that there shall be no more than 20,000 participants in each graduating class. The Director shall approve State plans providing in the aggregate for such enrollment of applicants as shall assure, as nearly as possible, annual graduating classes of 20,000. In a year in which applications are received in a number greater than that which will produce, in the judgment of the Director, a graduating class of more than 20,000, the Director shall, in deciding which applications to grant, give preference to those who will be participating in State plans that provide law enforcement personnel to areas of greatest need.

(c) RECRUITMENT OF MINORITIES.—Each State participating in the Police Corps program shall make special efforts to seek and recruit applicants from among members of all racial, ethnic or gender groups. (2) A participant who requests a leave of absence from educational study, training or service for a period not to exceed 1 year (or 18 months in the aggregate in the event of multiple requests) for any reason other than those listed in paragraph (1) may be granted such leave of absence by the State.

Such programs may be carried out at up to 3 training centers established for this purpose and administered by the Director, or by contracting with existing State training facilities. The Director shall contract with a State training facility upon request of such facility if the Director determines that such facility offers a course of training substantially equivalent to the Police Corps training program described in this subchapter.

(b) TRAINING SESSIONS.—A participant in a State Police Corps program shall attend two 8-week training sessions at a training center, one during the summer following completion of sophomore year and one during the summer following completion of junior year. If a participant enters the program after sophomore year, the participant shall complete 16 weeks of training at times determined by the Director.

(c) FURTHER TRAINING.—The 16 weeks of Police Corps training authorized in this section is intended to serve as basic law enforcement training but not to exclude further training of participants by the State and local authorities to which they will be assigned. Each State plan approved by the Director under section 940 shall include assurances that following completion of a participant's course of education each participant shall receive appropriate additional training by the State or local authority to which the participant is assigned. The time spent by a participant in such additional training, but not the time spent in Police Corps training, shall be counted toward fulfillment of the participant's 4-year service obligation.

(d) COURSE OF TRAINING.—The training sessions at training centers established under this section shall be designed to provide basic law enforcement training, including vigorous physical and mental training to teach participants self-discipline and organizational loyalty and to impart knowledge and understanding of legal processes and law enforcement.

(b) RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITIES.—A participant shall have all of the rights and responsibilities of and shall be subject to all rules and regulations applicable to other members of the police force of which the participant is a member, including those contained in applicable agreements with labor organizations and those provided by State and local law.

(c) DISCIPLINE.—If the police force of which the participant is a member subjects the participant to discipline such as would preclude the participant's completing 4 years of service, and result in denial of educational assistance under section 936, the Director may, upon a showing of good cause, permit the participant to complete the service obligation in an equivalent alternative law enforcement service and, if such service is satisfactorily completed, section 936(d)(1)(C) shall not apply.

(d) LAYOFFS.—If the police force of which the participant is a member lays off the participant such as would preclude the participant's completing 4 years of service, and result in denial of educational assistance under section 936, the Director may permit the participant to complete the service obligation in an equivalent alternative law enforcement service and, if such service is satisfactorily completed, section 936(d)(1)(C) shall not apply.

SEC. 940. STATE PLAN REQUIREMENTS.

A State Police Corps plan shall—

(1) provide for the screening and selection of participants in accordance with the criteria set out in section 937;

(2) state procedures governing the assignment of participants in the Police Corps program to State and local police forces (no more than 10 percent of all the participants assigned in each year by each State to be assigned to a statewide police force or forces);

(B) from commencement of a participant's fourth year of undergraduate study until completion of 4 years of police service by participant, only for compelling reasons or to meet the needs of the State Police Corps program and only with the consent of the participant;

(6) provide that no participant shall be assigned to serve with a local police force—

(A) whose size has declined by more than 5 percent since July 10, 1991; or

(B) which has members who have been laid off but not retired;

(7) provide that participants shall be placed and to the extent feasible kept on community and preventive patrol;

(8) assure that participants will receive effective training and leadership;

(9) provide that the State may decline to offer a participant an appointment following completion of Federal training, or may remove a participant from the Police Corps program at any time, only for good cause (including failure to make satisfactory progress in a course of educational study) and after following reasonable review procedures stated in the plan; and

(10) provide that a participant shall, while serving as a member of a police force, be compensated at the same rate of pay and benefits and enjoy the same rights under applicable agreements with labor organizations and under State and local law as other police officers of the same rank and tenure in the police force of which the participant is a member.

Subtitle E—Rural Crime Prevention Strategy

SEC. 971. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The traditional supportive roles of the family, church, school, and community have declined in importance as a positive social factor influencing the prevention and control of crime in rural areas. As a result in recent years rural areas have experienced a marked increase in crime rates. This increase is taking its toll on rural law enforcement practitioners who are already encumbered by numerous characteristics that are unique to their rural circumstances.

(2) Compounding the increase in crime rates, rural police unlike their urban counterparts, are likely to encounter a multitude of nontraditional police tasks such as fire and railroad emergencies, search and rescue missions, animal control problems, livestock theft, wildlife enforcement, illegal distilleries, illegal crop farming and drug manufacturing, rural drug trafficking, and toxic dumping.

(3) These problems are further exacerbated by the rural officer's distinct disadvantage with respect to the lack of adequate training to manage these varied assignments, the low degree of specialization of job tasks, unique job stress factors, and inadequate data resources. Inadequate rural crime statistics and data analysis capabilities further frustrate the rural police organization's ability to cope with the nature, extent, and trends of rural crime.

(4) Rural law enforcement agencies are at a critical juncture, and strategic planning and action are imperative. The Domestic Chemical Action Group convened by the National Institute of Justice in October 1990 has recommended that rural police receive training in various safety issues related to the identification, investigation, and seizure of illicit drug and chemical laboratories located in rural areas. Without such specialized training officials will face a high probability of explosions endangering police personnel and the community. National Institute of Justice sponsored research of environmental crime in major urban areas, including Los Angeles, has revealed the lack of police training in the identification, investigation, and clean-up of toxic and hazardous waste areas. It can be said with certainty that this recognized need for hazardous materials training is equally critical for rural police organizations.

SEC. 972. STRATEGY TO ADDRESS RURAL CRIME.

The purpose of this subtitle is to address the growing problems of rural crime in a systematic and effective manner with a program of practical and focused research, development, and dissemination designed to assist States and units of local government in rural areas throughout the country in implementing specific programs and strategies which offer a high probability of improving the functioning of their criminal justice systems.

SEC. 973. NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF JUSTICE NATIONAL ASSESSMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the National Institute of Justice (referred to in this subtitle as the "Director") shall conduct a national assessment of the nature and extent of rural crime in the United States, the needs of law enforcement and criminal justice professionals in rural States and communities, and promising strategies to respond effectively to those challenges, including—

(1) the problem of clandestine drug laboratories; changing patterns in their location and operation; safety and liability issues for both law enforcement officers and the community in the identification, investigation, seizure, and clean-up of clandestine laboratories;

(2) other environmental crimes, such as the dumping of hazardous and toxic wastes; the pollution of streams, rivers, and ground water; and access of rural communities to the expertise necessary to successfully identify, investigate, and prosecute such crimes;

(3) the cultivation of illegal crops, such as marijuana, including changing patterns in location and techniques for identification, investigation, and destruction;

(4) the problems of drug and alcohol abuse in rural communities, including law enforcement and criminal justice response and access to treatment services;

(5) the problems of family violence and child abuse, including law enforcement and criminal justice response and access to services for victims of such crimes;

(6) the problems of juvenile delinquency and vandalism as they affect rural communities;

(7) the access of law enforcement and criminal justice professionals in rural communities to the services of crime laboratories, the Automated Fingerprint Identification System, and other technological support;

(8) the access of law enforcement and criminal justice professionals in rural communities to professional training and development and the identification of models for the delivery of such training; and

(9) the special problems of drug abuse in jurisdictions with populations of 50,000 or less.

(b) FINAL REPORT.—The Director shall submit the national assessment to the President and Congress not later than 12 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) DISSEMINATION OF REPORT.—Based on the results of the national assessment and analysis of successful and promising strategies in these areas, the Director shall disseminate the results not only through reports, publications, and clearinghouse services, but also through programs of training and technical assistance, designed to address the realities and challenges of rural law enforcement.

SEC. 974. PILOT PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director may make grants to local law enforcement agencies for pilot programs and field tests of particularly promising strategies and models, which could then serve as the basis for demonstration and education programs under the Bureau of Justice Assistance Discretionary Grant Program.

(b) TYPES OF PROGRAMS.—Pilot programs funded under this section may include—

(1) programs to develop and demonstrate new or improved approaches or techniques for rural criminal justice systems;

(2) programs of training and technical assistance to meet the needs of rural law enforcement and criminal justice professionals including safety;

(3) a rural initiative to study and improve the response to traffic safety problems and drug interdiction;

(4) an ongoing program to assist law enforcement professionals in dealing with the hazards of clandestine drug laboratories;

(5) victim assistance information to assist departments in beginning and maintaining strong programs to assist victims and witnesses of crime;

(6) emergency preparedness information for community groups concerned about disaster preparedness on the family and community level; and

(7) a program targeted at communities of less than 50,000 stressing the need for production of public safety through extensive partnership efforts between law enforcement, other local government agencies, businesses, schools, community and social organizations, and citizens.

SEC. 975. FUNDING.

There are authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000 to carry out the national assessment and pilot programs required by this subtitle.

(6) the Presidential Commission on Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice of 1965 focused attention on many issues affecting law enforcement, and a review 25 years later would help to evaluate current problems, including drug-related crime, violence, racial conflict, and decreased funding; and

(7) a comprehensive study of law enforcement issues, including the role of the Federal Government in supporting law enforcement officers, working conditions, and responsibility for crime control would assist in redefining the relationships between the Federal Government, the public, and law enforcement officials.

"(c) DECLARATION OF DRUG EMERGENCY AREAS.—

"(1) PRESIDENTIAL DECLARATION.—(A) If a major drug-related emergency exists throughout a State or a part of a State, the President may, in consultation with the Director and other appropriate officials, declare the State or part of a State to be a drug emergency area and may take any and all necessary actions authorized by this subsection or by any other law.

"(B) For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'major drug-related emergency' means any occasion or instance in which drug trafficking, drug abuse, or drug-related violence reaches such levels, as determined by the President, that Federal assistance is needed to supplement State and local efforts and capabilities to save lives, to protect property and public health, and to promote safety.

"(2) PROCEDURE FOR DECLARATION.—(A) A request for a declaration by the President designating an area to be a drug emergency area shall be made in writing by the Governor of a State or the chief executive officer of a local government and shall be forwarded to the President through the Director in such form as the Director may by regulation require. One or more cities, counties, or States may submit a joint request for designation as a drug emergency area under this subsection.

"(B) A request under subparagraph (A) shall be based on a written finding that the major drug-related emergency is of such severity and magnitude that Federal assistance is necessary for an effective response to save lives, protect property and public health, and promote safety.

"(C) The President shall not limit declarations under this subsection to highly populated centers of drug trafficking, drug use or drug-related violence, but shall consider applications from governments of less populated areas where the magnitude and severity of such activities is beyond the capability of the State or local government to respond.

"(D) As part of a request for a declaration by the President under this subsection, and as a prerequisite to Federal drug emergency assistance under this subsection, the Governor or chief executive officer shall—

"(i) take appropriate responsive action under State or local law and furnish information on the nature and amount of State and local resources that have been or will be committed to alleviating the major drug-related emergency;

"(ii) certify that State and local government obligations and expenditures will comply with all applicable cost-sharing requirements of this subsection; and

"(iii) submit a detailed plan outlining the State or local government's short- and long-term plans to respond to the major drug-related emergency, specifying the types and levels of Federal assistance requested, and including explicit goals (quantitative goals, where possible) and timetables and shall specify how Federal assistance provided under this subsection is intended to achieve such goals.

"(E) The Director shall review a request submitted pursuant to this subsection and forward the application, along with a recommendation to the President on whether to approve or disapprove the application, within 30 days after receiving the application. Based on the application and the recommendation of the Director, the President may declare an area to be a drug emergency area under this subsection.

"(3) FEDERAL MONETARY ASSISTANCE.—(A) The President may make grants to State or local governments of up to $50,000,000 in the aggregate for any single major drug-related emergency.

"(B) The Federal share of assistance under this section shall not be greater than 75 percent of the costs necessary to implement the short- and long-term plan outlined in paragraph (2)(D)(iii).

"(C) Federal assistance under this subsection shall not be provided to a drug disaster area for more than 1 year, except that the President, on application of a Governor of a State or chief executive officer of a local government, and, based on the recommendation of the Director, may extend the provision of Federal assistance for not more than an additional 180 days.

"(D) A State or local government that receives Federal assistance under this subsection shall balance the allocation of such assistance evenly between drug supply reduction and drug demand reduction efforts, unless State or local conditions dictate otherwise.

"(4) NONMONETARY ASSISTANCE.—In addition to the assistance provided under paragraph (3), the President may—

"(A) direct any Federal agency, with or without reimbursement, to utilize its authorities and the resources granted to it under Federal law (including personnel, equipment, supplies, facilities, and managerial, technical, and advisory services) in support of State and local assistance efforts; and

"(B) provide technical and advisory assistance, including communications support and law enforcement-related intelligence information.

"(5) ISSUANCE OF IMPLEMENTING REGULATIONS.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this subsection, the Director shall issue regulations to implement this subsection, including such regulations as are necessary relating to applications for Federal assistance and the provision of Federal monetary and nonmonetary assistance.

(iii) Acceptance of completed voter registration application forms for transmittal to the appropriate State election official.

(B) If a voter registration agency designed under paragraph (2)(B) provides services to a person with a disability at the person's home, the agency shall provide the services described in subparagraph (A) at the person's home.

(5) A person who provides service described in paragraph (4) shall not—

(A) seek to influence an applicant's political preference or party registration;

(B) display any such political preference or party allegiance; or

(C) make any statement to an applicant or take any action the purpose or effect of which is to discourage the applicant from registering to vote.

(6) A voter registration agency that is an office that provides service or assistance in addition to conducting voter registration shall—

(A) distribute with each application for such service or assistance, and with each recertification, renewal, or change of address form relating to such service or assistance—

(i) the mail voter registration application form described in section 9(a)(2); or

(ii) the office's own form if it is substantially equivalent to the form described in section 9(a)(2), unless the applicant, in writing, declines to register to vote;

(B) to the greatest extent practicable, incorporate in application forms and other forms used at those offices for purposes other than voter registration a means by which a person who completes the form may decline, in writing, to register to vote in elections for Federal office; and

(C) provide to each applicant who does not decline to register to vote the same degree of assistance with regard to the completion of the registration application form as is provided by the office with regard to the completion of its own forms.

(7) No information relating to a declination to register to vote in connection with an applicant made at an office described in paragraph (6) may be used for any purpose other than voter registration.

(b) FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND PRIVATE SECTOR CO-OPERATION.—All departments, agencies, and other entities of the executive branch of the Federal Government shall, to the greatest extent practicable, cooperate with the States in carrying out subsection (a), and all nongovernmental entities are encouraged to do so.

(2) If a registration application is accepted within 5 days before the last day for registration to vote in an election, the application shall be transmitted to the appropriate State election official not later than 5 days after the date of acceptance.

SEC. 8. REQUIREMENTS WITH RESPECT TO ADMINISTRATION OF VOTER REGISTRATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In the administration of voter registration for elections for Federal office, each State shall—

(1) ensure that any eligible applicant is registered to vote in an election—

(A) in the case of registration with a motor vehicle application under section 5, if the valid voter registration form of the applicant is submitted to the appropriate State motor vehicle authority not later than the lesser of 30 days, or

VINTON L. HILL TRIBUTE

• Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, the future belongs to those who are willing to work for it. This single truth has been at the foundation of our Nation's blessed past, and if we are to endure the challenges before us, it must be at our foundation tomorrow. We are strong as a Nation because our predecessors worked to make us strong. Their examples of service and responsibility not only reached out to care and provide for others, but to serve as lasting examples of what can be done when we forget ourselves and go to work.

As President Richard von Weizäcker, of the Federal Republic of Germany, told us last week—April 30:

> There are convincing examples given by American citizens which are admired in Germany. Time and again when traveling in (America) we come across a pursuit of happi> ness that is not confined to satisfying selfish desires and amassing material riches. It embraces neighborly support, social engagement, and public responsibility. The term "charity begins at home" includes the readiness to give help instead of calling for higher authority or legislation. Your communities are full of private initiative and life. (And it) is this sense of personal dedication that will help us to stand up to the epochal changes and challenges of our time.

Mr. President, today I want to bring to the attention of my colleagues—and frankly to the attention of all Americans—one such example. His name is Vinton L. Hill, a man from New Castle County, DE, who worked for more than 30 years as a part of our Nation's proud railroad heritage. Vinton Hill started working for the Pennsylvania Railroad back in 1958—at the tender age of 20—and what is remarkable, Mr. President, is that in 34 years of service he was absent only 1 day, only 1 day in 34 years of employment.

In the community, Vinton and his wonderful wife, Kathy, demonstrated an equal determination to serve. They raised a family—two boys who are now successful professionals; they were actively involved in the schools, little leagues, and other community organizations, especially those that served the elderly and infirm. Indeed, it might be said, that Vinton and Kathy gave back more than they ever cared to receive.

At the moment, Vinton is waging a courageous battle for his health. Once again, his example is an inspiration to those who know him. I am proud to announce that Amtrak has created a national award in the name of Vinton L. Hill to annually honor Amtrak employees who achieve perfect attendance on the job. The Vinton L. Hill Award will be one that not only serves as an incentive for excellence, but one that will sustain his inspiring legacy and dedicated example for decades to come.

I add my sincere congratulations to Vinton and Kathy Hill, and I am proud of the opportunity I have to recognize this quiet example of personal dedication to the values that have built—and that will continue to sustain—America.•

COSPONSORSHIP OF S. 2384

• Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I rise today to talk about trash. Specifically, garbage. Or, as some are disposed to call it, solid waste. But no matter the name, garbage is still garbage and it currently threatens both the safety and health of our environment and our citizens.

We all remember the infamous garbage-barge incident during the summer of 1987. We had a good chuckle as the barge spent a hapless 162 days at sea trying to find somewhere to dump its garbage. The story even took on an international significance when the poor barge traveled down to Belize in an attempt to dispose of its cargo.

But this really is not a laughing matter. The garbage-barge incident served as a vivid illustration of the solid waste disposal problem in our country. Now, it is nearly 5 years later and the situation has gotten worse.

And this enormous problem boils down to: Where are we going to continue to put all the garbage Americans throw out? Well, it seems to be in places like my home State of Ohio, whether we like it or not.

In 1990 alone, Ohio received 1.8 million tons of imported waste. According to the Ohio Environmental Protection Agency [OEPA], if Ohio continues to take in garbage at this rate, all its landfills could be filled by the year 2000.

One can visualize a type of domino effect: As more States like Ohio are forced to accept outside garbage, they will be less able to dispose of their own garbage and, inevitably, will be forced to send their garbage elsewhere for disposal. The new recipient States will have to then safely dispose of not only their own solid waste but the waste of other States, as well.

What happens when the landfills of these new recipient States reach their capacity? Where will it, or can it, end? Are we prepared to leave our future generations with mounds of garbage and no place to put it? I, for one, think it is time to begin addressing this serious problem so that our children, and their children, will not be confronted by environmental horrors due to our neglect.

That is why I rise today to cosponsor S. 2384 which will help us avert this potentially disastrous scenario I outlined above. S. 2384 would give States and localities the authority to regulate out-of-State waste. But we can also do more.

Today I am also calling on the General Accounting Office [GAO] to begin evaluating the management, transportation, and disposal of solid waste. If we are going to get a handle on this problem, we need long-range solutions. The study I am asking for today will give us the necessary overview of the waste situation so that we can effectively implement long-term solutions.

Mr. President, let me give you a little history on what my State has done about this problem. In 1988, Ohio enacted a comprehensive solid waste management law. Since enactment of that legislation, 34 of the 48 solid waste districts in Ohio have submitted waste management plans to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency [EPA]. The State has also set the admirable goal of reducing and recycling 25 percent of its waste by June 1994.

These numbers clearly indicate that Ohio is taking significant steps toward resolving its own waste crisis. However, the rapidly dwindling landfill capacity in Ohio is threatened further by the vast quantities of waste hauled from out-of-State, primarily from the east coast.

As I pointed out before, Ohio received 1.8 million tons of imported waste in 1990. This type of influx has forced Ohio's back up against the wall. Out of 88 counties, 28 have no landfills and 35 have landfills with 5 years or less capacity remaining.

How can we expect a State such as Ohio to implement its own environmental objectives while having to deal with thousands of tons of imported trash? Requiring my State and others to handle their own solid waste problems as well as other States' problems is neither fair nor possible.

As it stands, States that are successful in implementing environmentally conscious ways of dealing with waste are punished. But there also are not any incentives for States to develop these types of plans, as long as their garbage can be shipped elsewhere.

S. 2384 will help remedy this unequitable situation. The bill gives States and localities the authority to refuse solid waste transported from other States. It is important to note, though, that this authority is linked to a State's ability to demonstrate the planning and siting of environmentally sound capacity within its own borders.

So the bill does not give States a free ride. States must prove that they care about protecting our environment and citizens. Only then, can they benefit under this law.

But, simply banning out-of-States waste is definitely not a substitute for long-term and comprehensive solid waste management plans. The authority to reject imported trash is a crucial piece of the overall puzzle of how to deal with garbage in an environmentally responsible manner.

Another crucial piece in this puzzle is an overall evaluation of where we stand now and where are we headed on this issue. Today, I am asking the GAO to undertake just such an evaluation.

Specifically, we need to know what sort of options exist for Federal and State governments to deal with transporting and disposing of all this waste. What sort of inter- and intrastate methods work? Will regional compacts work? That is an open question because as Ohioans know all too well, we have experienced some problems in getting the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compacts off to a fair and effective start.

Another issue I want the GAO to tackle is whether certain communities, from a racial and/or economic class perspective, have been subject, for whatever reasons, to having a disproportionate share of solid waste landfills. And, if so, have there been any adverse effects as a result?

In addition, although I would not want to put this question to every citizen in Ohio, I am going to be asking GAO to examine how much garbage is generated by the Federal Government.

Where does it go, what are the disposal costs, and can we be doing a better job, from both an economic and environmental angle?

Finally, the GAO needs to look at the U.S. EPA and its role. Have the EPA's programs been successful? Are the States receiving enough guidance and coordination?

We owe it to future generations not to simply act in the short term, or just sweep all this garbage under the rug. Yet, until we have the answers to some important questions, we will not be able to create effective long-term solutions to this problem.

America is in trouble. Garbage is piling up across this country and right now we are losing the ability to deal with it. Our environment is too fragile for us to continue to ignore the ever-increasing piles.

S. 2384 is a very big step in the right direction. So is getting a comprehensive evaluation of what more needs to be done. I urge my colleagues to also support this legislation.

Mr. President, I would ask that my request letter to GAO be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, May 14, 1992.

Hon. CHARLES A. BOWSHER,
Comptroller General, U.S. General Accounting Office, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. BOWSHER: One of the major problems this nation faces in the coming years is having sufficient capacity for the safe disposal of municipal solid waste. A growing number of cities, towns, and municipalities are dangerously close to exhausting present landfill capacities, without new disposal sites ready to come on line. Some communities are already finding it necessary to transport their solid waste, at substantial cost and at some risk to public health and safety, to other landfills within or outside of the State. This has led to tensions between the residents of areas with available landfills and those communities, particularly out-of-State, which are dependent on access to these landfills.

I know that you are aware that Congress is beginning to grapple with some of these matters in the context of reauthorization of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA). However, much long-range planning must be done to ensure that our solid waste management regime is safe, fair, and effective. As Chairman of the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs, I would like you to examine several issues on this front, relating to overall government management and intergovernmental relations, over which this Committee has jurisdiction:

(1) What are the most practical and prudent options facing the Federal and State governments, alone and collectively, for the safe disposal of municipal solid waste, including the use of inter- and intra-state shipments and regional compacts?

(2) Have certain communities, from a racial and/or economic class perspective, borne a disproportionate share of solid waste landfill sites, and what adverse effects, if any, have these communities experienced as a result? Are there fair and sufficient opportunities for public input in siting decisions, and are health and safety issues adequately addressed?

(3) To what extent is solid waste being shipped across the border from Canada, where tipping fees are higher, to northern U.S. landfills, and is the regulation and control of these shipments sufficient?

(4) How useful are state waste management plans in addressing state and local waste problems? How useful has EPA's guidance been to states in providing outreach, education, and technical assistance relating to the management and control of non-hazardous waste?

I am also interested in a couple other related issue areas, which could be addressed in these or subsequent reports. For instance, I would like to know whether private, onsite, incinerators, which can be used for both solid and hazardous waste, provide the same level of protection as commercial incinerators. In addition, I am interested in how effectively EPA has implemented its 1981 requirement for hazardous waste land disposal facilities to install adequate groundwater monitoring systems.

I recognize that the scope of this request is broad and its focus and priorities might change as your work progresses. Therefore, I would like to be kept abreast with periodic briefings as your work proceeds. Should you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me or Brian Dettelbach (224–4751) of the Committee staff, or Susan Carnohan (224–3353) of the personal staff.

Thank you for your prompt attention and consideration.

Sincerely,

JOHN GLENN,
Chairman.•

THE AMERICAN BANKRUPTCY INSTITUTE

• Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, hardly a day passes without news of a new major bankruptcy filing, or a story related to the rising tide of bankruptcy cases. During calendar year 1992, we expect more than 1 million individuals and businesses will seek protection from creditors under the bankruptcy code.

The Senator from Alabama, Mr. HEFLIN and I have introduced legislation, S. 1985, to make some needed changes in the bankruptcy law. This bill was reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee and will hopefully soon be considered by the full Senate. It is the product of a consensus effort led by the chairman of the Subcommittee on Courts, and was developed after a series of hearings last year. The first title of the bill calls for the creation of a National Bankruptcy Review Commission, to thoroughly study the existing framework and to make technical recommendations on changes in the law.

One of the premier organizations for the study of bankruptcy law and policy is the American Bankruptcy Institute [ABI]. The ABI is celebrating its 10th anniversary this year. Over the years, the ABI has assisted our subcommittee in identifying the issues that need further study. We on the Judiciary Committee are especially grateful for their thoughtful and nonbiased input.

Tomorrow, May 15, begins the annual spring meeting of the ABI here in Washington. More than 300 insolvency professionals will gather for a comprehensive program of current trends in the law. I note specifically on the ABI's program, a closing luncheon address on Monday by the Chief Justice. This event will also mark the occasion for the presentation of the ABI's Second Annual Congressional Service Award. The first recipient of the award last year was our colleague from Arizona, Senator DECONCINI. This year the award is being presented to the ranking member of the House Committee on the Judiciary, Representative HAMILTON FISH of New York.

I congratulate Representative FISH on this award in recognition of his service to sound bankruptcy policy, and salute the ABI on its decade of service to the study of bankruptcy.•

COSPONSORSHIP OF S. 2407

• Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to cosponsor S. 2407, a bill to amend the Board for International Broadcasting Act of 1973.

As democracy prevails throughout the Eastern bloc and the former Soviet Union, dictatorships continue to rule Asia, specifically Vietnam, Laos, North Korea, and the People's Republic of China. These governments continue to exert total control over their populations through a tight grip on information.

Radio Free Europe is an outstanding example of how open channels of communication can lead to revolutionized ways of thinking, as shown by its role in the fall of communism in the Eastern bloc and the lands formerly known as the Soviet Union.

Let us not underestimate the aggressive nature and repressive policies of Vietnam, Laos, North Korea, and the People's Republic of China. The Vietnamese and Laotian leaderships have retreated to hardline Communist Party politics. Social repression has not abated in Vietnam. The Pathet Lao in Laos have reaffirmed their commitment to the Socialist path, remaining steadfast in their antidemocratic attitudes, while continuing to deprive their people of the most basic human rights.

The People's Republic of China imprisoned Catholic Bishop Fan because he refused to accept the Catholic Patriotic Association. He died a broken man, a victim of the harsh and tyrannical Chinese system. China has also imprisoned students and intellectuals, for short terms as well as for life, for among other things, their participation in the Tiananmen Square protests. Moreover, China has actively cooperated in a number of areas with the terrorist states of Syria and Iraq. It is not satisfied with abusing its own people, but China seeks to export the means by which to terrorize others.

The evidence shows that these governments have no plans to follow the examples of the Eastern bloc and the former Soviet Union in flowing with the prevailing tide of democracy. As the leading proponent of democracy in the world, the United States should not allow the Asian people to be deprived of information and ideas which could ultimately lead to global cooperation and international understanding.

Therefore, I strongly urge my colleagues to support this bill and help work toward true freedom for the people of Asia.•

AIDS UPDATE

• Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, according to the Centers for Disease Control, as of March 31, 1992, 218,301 Americans have been diagnosed with AIDS; 139,269 Americans have died from AIDS; and 79,039 Americans are currently living with AIDS.

POLITICAL COURAGE: IT SAVES LIVES

Sharon Pratt Kelly, Mayor of the District of Columbia, has mounted an attack against the spread of AIDS that is as bold as it is realistic. She proposes to distribute condoms in city high schools, prisons, and jails. She also endorses a trial project to give clean hypodermic needs to drug addicts.

Mayor Kelly's action is based upon the deadly mathematics of AIDS. By the mid-1990's the number of AIDS cases in the District will likely reach 10,000, nearly triple last year's 3,500 cases. The biggest increase will be among heterosexuals who use illegal intravenous drugs, and their sex partners.

The city's teenagers, too, are increasingly vulnerable to AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases. Studies have shown that over three-quarters of D.C. teenagers are sexually active by the 10th grade, with two-thirds of teenage boys having had four partners or more by then. Many do not use condoms.

Overall, the rate of new HIV infections in the District of Columbia is the highest in the Nation.

Along with many others, Mayor Kelly believes that the most successful protection against AIDS is sexual abstinence. This has been a cornerstone of her anti-AIDS message since the start of her term. But the Mayor is a realist. She knows that moral preachments, however valid or warranted, are demonstrably insufficient to stem the AIDS epidemic. Along with public health officials and a majority of D.C.'s City Council, Mayor Kelly has looked at the facts about the spread of AIDS in the District. Consequently, she has proposed drastic, necessary actions.

Many have called Mayor Kelly's action politically risky, and it may be, if the measure of politics is solely what happens in the polls or at the ballot box. But her courage in discerning what needs to be done to save lives evidences a personal definition of politics that includes leadership and a clean responsibility to tell people the truth about how AIDS is spread, especially those most at risk.•

COSPONSORING "POLISH-AMERICAN HERITAGE MONTH"

• Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to cosponsor a resolution designating October 1992 as Polish-American Heritage Month. This legislation recognizes the substantial contributions of Polish-Americans to this country and the world.

Polish-Americans have played an important role in the cultural development of American society. As a land of immigrants, America owes much to the ethnic groups which helped forge this Nation. The 6 million Polish-Americans and their ancestors who came here before them, have steered this country in numerous areas. Polish-Americans participate in the fields of science, education, entertainment, sports, and the arts. Individuals like Josef Hofman, a famous pianist and cofounder of the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, and Jan Paderewski, a respected statesman and composer, have made great contributions to the growth of this country.

Throughout their history, Poles have espoused democracy but were subjected to tyranny imposed by others. As communism began to wither, Poland became the first of the Eastern bloc countries to establish democratic institutions.

We should honor the perseverance of the Polish people who throughout their history had to fight for their freedom. Now that Poland is free, let us celebrate the stubborn persistence of the Poles who refused to bow to tyranny.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this resolution.•

ACADEMY OF THE SACRED HEART, NEW ORLEANS, LA

• Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize a very talented group of students who have taken an active interest in our American system of government. Students from the Academy of the Sacred Heart in New Orleans recently placed second in the National Competition on the Bicentennial of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. Having won the State competition, these 28 students earned the privilege of representing Louisiana on the national level. They rose to the challenge and brought home second place honors for their great State of Louisiana.

These bright students possess impressive knowledge of our American system of government, exhibited by their strong showing at this competition. They recognize that it is very important for the citizens of our country to get involved in the system and remain informed of the important issues of our day. In fact, this is the only way in which any democracy can flourish. I applaud the students at Sacred Heart in New Orleans for the interest and zeal with which they tackled this competition.

The team members include: Kim Adams, Katherine Anderson, Erica Andrews, Alice Babst, Julie Brewer, Catherine Brown, Stephanie Casey, Keegan Chopin, Caroline Christy, Nicole Constantin, Kate Crassons, Megan Derbes, Jenny Foley, Dottie Gibbons, Madeline Gorman, Colleen Guste, Aubrey Hardwick, Michelle Kehoe, Diane Killeen, Kristin Klees, Camey Liberto, Simone Mollere, Robyn Neitzschman, Aija Ozols, Katie Ratte', Sara Schmidt, Deme Tsatsoulis, and Nina Wessel.

They deserve to be commended for their dedication and commitment to their educational goals. I know I share the pride of their friends and families in their impressive achievement. These students have represented Louisiana well, and I thank them for their hard work.•

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF REV. LEOPOLD V. PROZNY

• Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize an outstanding clergyman, Father Leopold V. Prozny of Rome, NY who is celebrating his 50th anniversary of his ordination to the Roman Catholic Priesthood.

Father Prozny was born in Rome, NY on February 9, 1917, son of John and Frances Muszynski Prozny. His early education was received in the public schools and the Transfiguration School of Rome, NY. Later, Father graduated from Rome Free Academy High School. He earned his bachelor of arts degree from St. John Kanty Prepatory School in Erie, PA, and received his religious training at St. Bernard's Seminary in Rochester, NY.

Father Leopold Prozny was ordained at the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception, Syracuse, NY on June 6, 1942 by the late Most Reverend Walter A. Forey, Bishop of Syracuse. Father Prozny's first assignment was at St. Stanislaus Church in Utica and then at St. Mary's Church in New York Mills, NY. It was here that Father Prozny became very active with the Boy Scouts and traveled with a group of Scouts to California by train for an unforgettable experience.

From 1958 to 1973 Father Prozny was pastor of St. Casimir's Church in Endicott, NY. In September 1973 Father Prozny was assigned to Holy Trinity Parish in Utica with much experience behind him, ready to serve the people of his new parish. He demonstrated a particular adeptness at maintaining a delicate balance between the old and the new.

Father Prozny has returned to some of the traditional Polish customs, particularly around Eastertime. One custom that Father Prozny has brought to Holy Trinity is having the tomb of Christ at the Main Altar, with St. Michael's Lancers standing vigil on Good Friday through Easter Sunday Resurrection Mass.

Father Leo is vice chaplain of the national organization, the Polish Roman Catholic Union of American and also serves as vice president of the Polish American Congress for the Central and Northern Districts of New York State.

Rev. Leo Prozny has had a long distinguished career in the priesthood. I commend him for his 50 years of faithful service to the people of God and wish him many more years of health and happiness.•

DEVELOPMENTS IN RETAIL GASOLINE MARKET

• Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, on May 6, my distinguished colleague from Arizona, Senator DECONCINI, presided over a hearing of the Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on Antitrust, Monopolies, and Business Practices that focused on developments in the retail gasoline market. At that hearing, independent service station dealers, petroleum marketers, convenience store operators, and others told the subcommittee that price inversions in the marketplace had devastated their businesses. They also testified that absent some action by Congress, the major refiners would be successful in driving these independents out of business, thus lessening competition in the retail gasoline market and raising consumer prices. That view was also echoed by a consumer representative.

A price inversion is an action by refiners which renders irrelevant the marketing efficiencies of smaller independent competitors. The clearest example of a price inversion is when a refiner charges a wholesale customer a higher per gallon price for gasoline than the same refiner charges you or me for fuel at a corner station in the same geographic area as the wholesale customer.

Why do these situations occur? The refiners blame the inversions which we all heard about in 1990 and 1991 on the invasion of Kuwait by Iraq and the subsequent war. I am more than a little skeptical of this explanation. While the invasion and war certainly created turmoil in the oil markets, why would it have caused refiners to charge wholesale customers more than retail motorists?

Even if we accept the war theory, how does this explain the price inversions that are occurring today? The war has been over for more than a year. Crude oil prices are stable.

Why would a price inversion occur in a market such as this? Witness after witness gave the subcommittee example after example of price inversions still occurring. One witness, Mr. L.W. Locke of Enfield, NC, said that on the very day he was testifying before Congress, one of his suppliers was selling unleaded, regular gasoline at a station it operates at $1.029, while it charged him $1.047 at the wholesale terminal.

Mr. Locke's testimony cited other examples of inversions:

In February 1992, a marketer in Mobile, AL, said his supplier was selling gasoline at its own retail outlets 2.9 cents below the delivered price into a jobber-owned service station;

An Indiana marketer said his supplier charged him 0.2 cents per gallon more for diesel fuel than the same refiner was retailing diesel fuel at one of its own direct outlets;

In Rhode Island a refiner was offering gasoline to motorists 1 to 2 cents below the wholesale marketer's buying price in the same area.

As recently as April 1992, a refiner-operated retail outlet in Ohio was offering regular unleaded at 91.9 cents per gallon, while the price to the independent wholesaler was 97.15 cents per gallon—a 5 cents per gallon difference.

Also in April, another integrated oil company was charging its independent wholesalers in South Carolina 96.9 cents per gallon, while selling directly to motorists at its refiner-operated station at 3 cents per gallon less, 93.9 cents per gallon.

Mr. Deane Stewart, a constituent of mine, testified that in the last 2 years, the Illinois Petroleum Marketers Association has experienced a loss of one-sixth of their independent marketer members. He cited the practice of refiners selling to motorists at their direct-operated stations at lower prices than they charge their wholesale customers as a key contributing factor to many of the small-business failures in the marketing segment. Clearly the wholesaler cannot afford to transport product and pay for his other necessary business costs while paying more for the product at wholesale than a motorist does at a refiner-operated retail station down the street.

And, just yesterday, I received a letter from a constituent of mine in Macomb, IL. He gave me another example of the price inversions which continue to occur. In late April 1992, a branded retail outlet was selling gasoline at almost 9 cents per gallon below cost, when taxes and transportation costs are included.

Mr. President, it is time for the Senate to act. There are three different proposals being considered by the subcommittee. Our challenge in the weeks ahead is to forge a broad compromise which will allow us to get something enacted this year.

Until that time, it is my intention not to let this issue go unnoticed. I intend to take to the Senate floor every week to give a report of the latest examples of price inversions in the petroleum market.•

REV. JOSEPH A. MARTIN 25TH ANNIVERSARY

• Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Rev. Joseph A. Martin on the occasion of his silver jubilee. Father Joe Martin is dearly loved by the people of Westchester, NY, with good reason; Father Joe has given 25 years of his life and himself to the service of his people as confessor, counselor, educator, director of vocations, and director of the parish mission. I want to take this opportunity to congratulate and thank Father Joe for his years of dedicated service to the people of New York.

I am proud to stand here today to pay tribute to Father Joe Martin, who personifies the very best of America. He was born to Joseph and Constance Martin on October 6, 1932, in Peekskill, NY. He attended Assumption Elementary School; Peekskill High School; Iona, St. Philip Neri, and Dunwoodie Schools. He was ordained to the priesthood on May 27, 1976, and was stationed at the Church of St. Patrick in Yorktown Heights until January 1975 when he was appointed counsel of conciliation. In the fall of 1977 Father Joe became director of vocations of the archdiocese. Five years later Father Joe found himself back at Dunwoodie as spiritual director at the seminary. In 1988 Father Joe became director of the parish mission team and was reappointed in 1991 for another 3 years.

To speak of the Rev. Joseph Martin as a mere chronology of appointments and job descriptions is not to speak of Father Joe at all. Father Joe is a highly respected and deeply loved priest, who has many abilities, talents, interests, gifts, and attributes, including a fabulous sense of humor. Father Martin is also a great athlete; from basketball and baseball, to skiing, running, tennis, golf, and big game fishing, Father Joe Martin is always on the move.

He has frequently been seen to sport his favorite apparel, his Peekskill parka from L.L. Bean; unless, of course, it's Christmastime, when Father Joe is known to sport his Frosty the Snowman boxers and his corduroy slacks with reindeer on them.

His manner may exude humor always, but Father Joe has a very serious message: You're not loved because you are beautiful, you are beautiful because you are loved. Father Joe is a popcorn chomping, Bermuda hopping, impossible dreamer; but he is also a uniquely talented priest who has been given immense ecclesiastical trust.

Father Joe has spent his life serving others. He has been of service to the people of God for 25 years now. Joe Martin is a great guy and a super priest and it gives me immense pleasure to salute him today. I ask my colleagues in the Senate to join me today in congratulating Father Joseph Martin on 25 years of life given freely to the service of others. Joe, we wish you many more years of health, happiness, and humor.•

HAMILTON STANDARD'S SPACESUITS USED IN RESCUE

• Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, today is not only a proud day for the American space program, it is a proud day for the men and women of Hamilton Standard in Connecticut. They are the ones who made the spacesuits worn by the astronauts who captured the Intelsat satellite yesterday and prepared it for launch today into its proper orbit. It was the most daring and dramatic rescue in space ever, and I am proud that a Connecticut company and its workers played a role in this historic event.

In the midst of a long recession, American technology and even the American work ethic have been under attack, here at home, and from our competitors overseas. This outer space rescue also helps rescue America's prestige, and reputation for hard work, innovation, and determination. The quality of work that Americans are capable of producing is evidenced in the spacesuits that enabled the three brave astronauts to venture from the Endeavor during this mission. Those suits worked, as they have in the past, magnificently.

Too often we only seem to pay attention to news that's bad. This is one story that the world paid attention to, and it is good news all the way. The mission of the Endeavor lived up to its name, which means "to strive, to reach for something." The astronauts reached, quite literally, for something, and their reach did not exceed their grasp. We have all been uplifted by their otherworldy performance.

I salute our astronauts, NASA, and the men and women at Hamilton Standard for a job well done.•

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE POLISH SINGERS' ALLIANCE OF AMERICA

• Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise to announce that the State of Michigan will host the 43d International Convention of the Polish Singers' Alliance of America from May 21 through May 24, 1992.

Since its founding on May 13, 1989, the Polish Singers' Alliance has sponsored a gathering and competition of Polish choral groups every 3 years. This year, the event is hosted by the District IV Association which is based in Hamtramck, MI. Six choruses of this organization will welcome 38 other groups from Michigan, Illinois, New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Indiana, Ohio, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Arizona, and Ontario, Canada. Together, some 1,000 voices will join together in a tribute to the historical achievements of Polish musical tradition.

The assembly will host numerous activities including the exciting choral competition, itself. In past gatherings of the Polish Singers' Alliance, choruses from Michigan and around the country have demonstrated their talents by performing a diverse selection of the rich genre of Polish classical, religious, folk, and modern music.

The International Convention of the Polish Singers' Alliance not only celebrates Polish musical traditions, but it also makes a very important statement about the history of the Polish people. For many generations, especially in the last century, the Polish nation has faced enormous difficulties and tragedies. During these times, music has always been a symbol of the strength of the Polish people. All of the choruses are worthy of congratulations for their efforts to preserve their ancestral inheritance.

Thanks to the strong faith and determination of the Polish people, a new era for that country has begun only recently. The singers participating in the convention certainly appreciate the traditional Polish proverb which proclaims: "He who sings, prays twice." The entire convention can rejoice in this reality.

On behalf of the people of the State of Michigan, I welcome all of the participants of the convention to our State. May their stay be one filled with creativity, health, and happiness. As they enter into the second century of their existence, may the Polish Singers' Alliance be an inspiration to succeeding generations to keep all they have worked for alive. Zycze wszystkim wszystkiego najlepszego. Sto lat.•

RETIREMENT OF RABBI STANLEY M. KESSLER

• Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise to pay tribute to Rabbi Stanley M. Kessler, an eminent religious, intellectual, and humanitarian leader in Connecticut, on the occasion of his retirement in June after 38 years as rabbi of the Beth El Temple of West Hartford. He will fulfill the remainder of his life tenure with that temple as rabbi emeritus.

Born and raised in Pennsylvania, a young Rabbi Kessler flew 18 missions over Europe while serving in the Air Force during World War II. After the war, Kessler's course embraced the positive potential of humanity for moral development and the ingenuity of peace. He entered the Jewish Theological Seminary, where he was ordained as rabbi, in 1951. After continued studies at the seminary, he earned a master of Hebrew literature degree and a doctorate of divinity. His love of knowledge has proven a strong rudder throughout his professional life, leading him to graduate work at Columbia University and the Hebrew University of Jerusalem and, later, a teaching position in the religion department of Trinity College in Hartford.

Rabbi Kessler's commitment to fostering cross-cultural communication and broadening human understanding has characterized much of the last four decades of his career; indeed, his life has been emblematic of practicing what he preaches. He joined the legendary "freedom riders" during the civil rights movement of the 1960's and participated in protests in Birmingham and Selma, AL. He has traveled to Israel 27 times since 1949, becoming a virtual emissary of good will between that country and ours. He has visited Jewish communities throughout the Soviet Union, the Far East, India, South Africa, South America, and the Middle East. His various travels have informed his insight and global perspective, which he has shared from the pulpit, the classroom, and the newspaper column, as an international correspondent for the Hartford Courant.

Sitting on various boards and commissions through the years, all unified by a common optimistic agenda for change, Rabbi Kessler has blended the sacred and the secular in his relationship with the institutions of civilization. Lending his moral training and acuity to the dialog of policymakers and common people worldwide, Rabbi Kessler has succeeded, in ways beyond our capacity to measure, to make this world a better place and to encourage us to risk our proud differences for peace and broader understanding.

As it is written in the Book of Mihnah, "The world stands upon three things: on justice, on truth, on peace." Rabbi Stanley Kessler has labored hard to keep the world standing. For his great contributions, his enlightened mind and heart, and his friendship, I am ever thankful, and wish him greater rewards in the coming years.•

NEWAYGO COUNTY, MI, PRIDE GROUP NATIONAL RUNNER-UPS

• Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise today to honor 24 of our Nation's finest high school students. The students are members of the Newaygo County, MI PRIDE—Parents' Resource Institute for Drug Education—group and have dedicated themselves to spreading a strong antidrug message to their peers.

Before approximately 2,000 people at the recent 1992 PRIDE World Drug Conference in Houston, TX, Newaygo County's PRIDE group became national runner-ups for their death skit presentation. The play centers on a classmate who has died as a result of drinking and driving. The student asks God for a second chance in life but is rejected. As classmates pass by the casket of their deceased friend, the group's emotional antidrug message is unforgettably conveyed to the audience.

Founded in 1989, Newaygo County's PRIDE group has performed before more than 25,000 students at schools throughout the State of Michigan. To have achieved such high national distinction in such a short timespan is a remarkable achievement, and one that is a true testament to the students' hard work and commitment. I commend their dedication.

The group's success is also attributable to the hundreds of volunteer hours put forth by dedicated adults. Jay DeWispelaere, Don Terrill, Newaygo County Sheriff Roger Altena, Kathy Bullis, Peggy Mercer, and student advisers Brenda Bacon and Jennifer Elworthy are to be congratulated for their efforts and commitment to Newaygo County PRIDE.•

REMEMBER THE VICTIMS OF AIDS

• Mr. WOFFORD. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to remind my colleagues that this Sunday marks the ninth International AIDS Candlelight Memorial. I particularly want to salute the organizers of the memorial events to be held in Pennsylvania.

Organizers of these events have worked long and hard to honor the memories of those we have lost to AIDS. Our society has slowly come to the understanding that this illness can affect anyone. Although no truly accurate statistics exist, some estimates indicate that over 125,000 individuals in the United States may have already died from AIDS.

I know that many of my colleagues share a commitment to many of the principles enumerated by the groups involved in these remembrance ceremonies. We must pledge ourselves to continue to aggressively research the disease and its possible treatments and cures. While increased medical research is an important component to curing individuals infected with AIDS, it is not the only answer. We must also pledge ourselves to continued educational efforts by government, schools, religious leaders, communities, and families to help us curb the spread of AIDS.

Each life we lose to AIDS costs us not just in dollars but robs us as well of the vitality and spirit that AIDS victims brought to their communities. We must not simply remember these persons, we must mobilize for action, to involve ourselves in the fight against this disease. That is why I, as a longtime advocate of voluntary community and national service, am so pleased to note that organizers of these events are using them as opportunities to enlist memorial service participants in this continued struggle. Once again I salute those involved every day in this struggle and ask my colleagues to remember the many thousands who have died of AIDS.•

THE NATIONAL BEVERAGE CONTAINER REUSE AND RECYCLING ACT

• Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, many in this body have followed the efforts of the Environment and Public Works Committee as it seeks to craft legislation to reauthorize the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act. I want to encourage my colleagues on that committee in their efforts. Passage of effective RCRA legislation is the most important step this body can take toward addressing the growing solid waste crisis facing this country.

Mr. President, I rise briefly this afternoon to highlight for my colleagues a very important vote which took place in the Environment and Public Works Committee. The committee voted on an amendment offered by Senator JEFFORDS that would have included a national beverage container deposit provision in RCRA. While the measure failed by three votes, I see much to be encouraged about and will continue to press for adoption of this effective recycling program.

There appeared to be some confusion on the part of committee members regarding the Commerce Committee's interest in this legislation, which is drafted as an amendment to RCRA and logically belongs on that vehicle. Several members of the Environment Committee apparently voted against the amendment on deposits because they believed that the Commerce Committee intends to take action on the proposal.

However, for the past 10 years, we have politely and patiently requested a hearing in the Commerce Committee on this issue. We have been turned away each year. No hearings have been forthcoming. Hearings would show the undeniable value of beverage container deposits, something opponents of this legislation seek to avoid at all costs.

But opponents have not silenced the three favorable studies conducted by the General Accounting Office. Nor have they silenced a host of other studies published by cities, research groups, and universities. Nor have they silenced the record of success achieved in the States that have deposit systems in place. This record should come across loud and clear anyone skeptical about the effectiveness and value of this proposal.

This proposal belongs on RCRA. RCRA is the leading Federal recycling statute. Any recycling legislation passed by this body that omits the deposits on beverage containers looks like an empty vessel.

I agree with the sentiments of my good friend, Senator JEFFORDS: It is a sad commentary when this body cannot pass environmental legislation that is proven to work and that has the support of the vast majority of Americans. Today, nine States, including Oregon, lead the way with deposits on beverage containers—nine States which the GAO concluded are doing the vast majority of recycling in this country.

Much lamenting occurs on this floor about the low recycling rate we are now achieving. We currently recycle an embarrassing 13 percent of our garbage. Other than offering a goal of reaching a 25-percent recycling rate by the year 2000, I see very little leadership at the Federal level in the area of recycling policy.

Unlike many proposals, a national deposit system would provide tangible benefits the moment it goes into effect. This program alone would increase this Nation's overall recycling rate from 13 to over 17 percent, bringing us one-third of the way to our goal of a 25-percent nationwide recycling rate.

I continue to be dismayed that those in the beverage industry turn up their nose at this 4-percent increase and defend the status quo. But can those of us in Congress afford to take such an arrogant attitude? I do not believe so. To date, the efforts of deposit States translate into an energy savings of over 3.5 billion gallons of oil worth $2.3 billion. If enacted on a nationwide basis, a deposit system would save the equivalent of 4 million gallons each day.

We have a garbage crisis, an energy crisis, and litter continues to be a blight on our roadsides and beaches. Day after day, States with deposit laws prove that such a system works quite effectively on each of these problems. And if there is one thing we need around here it is programs that work.

As a former Governor, I believe that the best legislative ideas are those that evolve at the State level. We are on firm ground when we use the States as laboratories and learn from their experiences. There is no better argument in favor of deposits than to simply point to the experience of deposit States.

Those in the beverage industry have spent millions in States across the country to defeat this proposal. Many will recall the $2.3 million the beverage industry spent to defeat a local referendum on beverage container deposits in Washington, DC a few years ago. Outspending the supporters of deposits is an industry goal and they have done so, often at a rate of 10 to 1.

Well, good ideas do not die quite so easily. The head-in-the-sand industry rhetoric will not retrieve the more than 60 billion beverage containers that will be discarded this year, resulting in an energy loss equivalent to nearly 4 billion gallons of gasoline.

Life without a national deposit system is a luxury we can no longer afford. This is solid environmental legislation with a proven record of success. I want my colleagues to know that I intend to press this issue at every opportunity.●

APPOINTMENT BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], chairman; and

AUTHORIZATION FOR TESTIMONY AND DOCUMENT PRODUCTION BY AND REPRESENTATION OF EMPLOYEE OF THE SENATE

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator MITCHELL and the distinguished Republican leader Mr. DOLE, I send to the desk a resolution to authorize a Senate employee to testify and produce documents and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 297) to authorize testimony and document production by and representation of employee of the Senate in United States v. Charles E. Hughes, Sr.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the U.S. attorney for the Middle District of Tennessee is prosecuting an assault weapon case in federal district court titled United States versus Charles E. Hughes, Sr. The defendant, a resident of Louisiana, furnished materials to Senator JOHNSTON's office in support of his request that the office assist him regarding his allegations of unfair treatment. The Senator's staff forwarded these materials to the Department of Justice, on the understanding that this was in accordance with the constituent's wishes, in order that the allegations could be appropriately reviewed. The U.S. attorney believes that portions of these materials are relevant to the trial of this case and is seeking production of the office's original records and testimony about the facts of their delivery.

It is understood by the U.S. attorney that internal Senate documents and confidential records pertaining to casework performed for the constituent in other areas will not be sought in connection with this matter. This resolution would authorize production of, and testimony about, the original materials that the defendant provided, which were forwarded to the Justice Department. The resolution would also authorize representation.

The resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

S. RES. 297

Whereas, in the case of United States v. Charles E. Hughes, Sr., No. 3-91-00194, pending in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee, the United States Attorney has caused a subpoena for testimony and document production at trial to be served upon Shannon Langlois, an employe of the Senate on the staff of Senator J. Bennett Johnston;

Whereas, pursuant to sections 703(a) and 704(a)(2) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. §§288b(a) and 288c(a)(2), the Senate may direct its counsel to represent employees of the Senate with respect to any subpoena, order, or request for testimony relating to their official responsibilities;

Whereas, by the privileges of the Senate of the United States and Rule XI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, no evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate can, by administrative or judicial process, be taken from such control or possession but by permission of the Senate;

Whereas, when it appears that evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate is needed for the promotion of justice, the Senate will take such action as will promote the ends of justice consistent with the privileges of the Senate: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That Shannon Langlois is authorized to testify and to produce documents in United States v. Charles E. Hughes, Sr., except concerning matters for which a privilege should be asserted.

APPROPRIATED FUNDS FOR THE MISSISSIPPI SIOUX INDIANS

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration Calendar No. 455, S. 2342, a bill relating to the Mississippi Sioux Indians; that the bill be deemed read a third time, passed; that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; and that any statements relating to this measure appear at the appropriate place in the RECORD as if read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

So the bill (S. 2342) to amend the act entitled "An Act to provide for the disposition of funds appropriated to pay judgment in favor of the Mississippi Sioux Indians in Indian Claims Commission dockets numbered 142, 359, 360, 361, 362, and 363, and for other purposes," approved October 25, 1972 (86 Stat. 1168 et seq.) was deemed read the third time, and passed; as follows:

CONGRATULATING THE CREW OF THE SPACE SHUTTLE "ENDEAVOUR"

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 296, a resolution to congratulate the crew of the space shuttle Endeavour for the success of their mission, submitted earlier today by Senator GARN; that the resolution be agreed to and the motion to reconsider laid upon the table; further that any statements appear in the RECORD at the appropriate place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I thank my colleague for offering this, and the Senate agreeing to it. I will be very brief.

I would simply like to say how proud I was of the Endeavour astronauts yesterday. There have only been six missions that have participated in the either repair or trying to save satellites. The third such mission was the one that I participated in, in 1985.

So I watched with particular interest, last night, the skill of those crew members, particularly Dan Brandenstein. I do not think most people realize what skill it takes to rendezvous at 17,500 miles an hour with a 9,500-pound satellite.

I also recall—I think it is appropriate that Senator FORD is on the floor because he and I were members of the same class of 1974. And in February of 1975, as new members of the then full Senate Space Authorization Committee, we toured NASA's facilities, met General Leonov and the Russian crew of Soyuz and the Apollo-Soyuz mission.

So he, too, has been involved in the space program for a number of years.

This was such a spectacular mission yesterday, showing the ability of human beings to be smarter than computers and robots, and their ingenuity being able to solve a problem.

I am pleased the Senate has seen fit to pass this resolution commending them for their superior work, and I thank the distinguished Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. FORD. I thank my friend, also.

The resolution (S. Res. 296) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

S. RES. 296

Whereas the crew of the Space Shuttle Endeavour has successfully completed its assignment to rendezvous, capture, and deploy the stranded INTELSAT VI telecommunications satellite;

Whereas the successful capture of the INTELSAT VI satellite represents the first simultaneous spacewalk by 3 astronauts in the history of manned space flight and is the 100th spacewalk in the history of both the United States and Soviet space programs;

Whereas the capture of the INTELAST VI satellite involved both the largest spacewalk in the history of the United States space program and the first time 3 such spacewalks have been conducted on a single shuttle flight;

Whereas in overcoming the initial malfunction of the capture device, the crew of the Endeavour, and the mission support teams, quickly conceived and designed an alternative strategy to secure the INTELSAT VI satellite utilizing Space Station Freedom structural components, which were readily deployed to serve as a base enabling the 3 astronauts to capture the satellite;

Whereas this mission brilliantly demonstrates the unique ability of astronauts to perform complex and challenging tasks in space with resourcefulness, ingenuity, and flexibility far beyond the capabilities of machines and other robotic devices; and

Whereas this flight of the Space Shuttle Endeavour is it maiden voyage as the latest addition to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's orbiter fleet which was fully funded in 1986, and was built and delivered as initially scheduled, under its estimated cost: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That—

(1) the Senate commends and congratulates the crew of the Space Shuttle Endeavour for their magnificent rescue of the INTELSAT VI satellite and for making the maiden voyage of this orbiter so memorable and successful; and

(2) the Secretary of the Senate is directed to deliver certified copies of this resolution to Daniel Goldin, Administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and to Daniel C. Brandenstein, Commander of the Space Shuttle Endeavour STS-49 mission crew.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEE TO REPORT

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on the Friday, May 15, from 10 a.m. to 12 noon, the Committee on Banking and the Committee on Environment and Public Works may file reported legislative calendar business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDERS FOR MAY 15 AND MAY 19, 1992

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 10 a.m. Friday, May 15, that when the Senate meets on Friday, it meet in pro forma session only; that at the close of the pro forma session, the Senate stand in recess until 9:30 a.m., Tuesday, May 19; that on Tuesday, following the prayer, the Journal of proceedings be deemed approved to date; and following the time for the two leaders, there be a period for morning business, not to extend beyond 10 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each; with Senator GORTON recognized for up to 10 minutes; further that on Tuesday, the Senate stand in recess from 12:30 p.m. to 2:15 p.m., in order to accommodate the regular party conference luncheons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate today, I ask unanimous consent the Senate stand in recess as previously ordered.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 9:32 p.m., recessed until Friday, May 15, 1992, at 10 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

FIGHTING FOR RAPE VICTIMS

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize my dear friend, Gail Abarbanel, and to share with my colleagues an interview published in the Los Angeles Times. Gail's commitment to women and children who have been sexually abused is clear. She has been a pioneer in this area; both the Santa Monica Rape Treatment Center [SMRTC] and Stuart House, a program for sexually abused children, are used as models to establish similar programs around the country.

Q&A—FIGHTING FOR RAPE VICTIMS

Gail Abarbanel, director of the Santa Monica Rape Treatment Center.

Claim to Fame: Founded center that combines medical treatment with psychological counseling for rape victims. Since its inception in 1974, the center, based at Santa Monica Hospital, has spearheaded a variety of studies and programs.

Background: Abarbanel, 47, earned her undergraduate degree at UCLA and a master's in social work at USC. In 1974, she became the first social worker at Santa Monica Hospital, where she pioneered the concept of counseling rape victims in a hospital. In 1988, she founded Stuart House to treat sexually abused children.

(Interviewer: Staff writer Petula Dvorak.)

Q: How did you get so involved in the issue of rape?

A: It was one of the first issues I became interested in when I started working at Santa Monica Hospital. It was really by chance—it was at that point in history when people were starting to pay more attention to rape.

Within the first month I saw two women who had been raped, who had come here after receiving very bad treatment at other places. I was really affected by their experiences. One victim was a young woman who took a walk on the beach on a Sunday afternoon and was brutally raped by a stranger. She was filled with humiliation.

She had a lot of fears about her family finding out because she felt there was a stigma attached to being a rape victim and she felt that they would blame her. Seven days after the rape, she felt no way out other than making a suicide attempt and she actually came to Santa Monica Hospital in the emergency department having slashed her wrist.

That really had a profound impact on me and I realized there was no place for her to go, there was no special place for rape victims. So that led to the Rape Treatment Center.

Q: What services does the Rape Treatment Center provide?

A: What's unique about the Rape Treatment Center is it provides all of the services victims need in one facility—all the medical, psychological and legal services the victims need. It saves victims from the stress and the trauma of having to go to different locations and different agencies.

We provide 24-hour emergency medical care and the evidentiary examination for the victim. We also provide long-term professional counseling services. We provide legal assistance and advocacy. We provide accompaniment services—we accompany victims during the medical exam, during police reporting and to the courts. And then we also have extensive education and prevention programs.

We have a large school-based prevention program that reaches about 6,000 teen-agers each year in the public schools. It's a three-day program that Rape Center instructors teach in high school classes for 10th-graders, because teen-agers are more vulnerable to rape than any other age group.

We have a national campus rape campaign that we've developed because we were seeing a lot of victims from college campuses. We produced a film, "Campus Rape," that's being used in every state in the country on college campuses. We also wrote a book, "Sexual Assault on Campus—What Colleges Can Do," that's being used across the country to change policy and procedures on college campuses so that they're more responsive.

Q: What have been some of the center's principal innovations?

A: The center in the mid-'70s pioneered a model for hospital-based treatment of sexual assault victims, and that model has been adopted all over the country at hospitals and other agencies that provide services for rape victims. We incorporated psychological considerations into the medical response; up until that time rape was really not recognized to be a psychological emergency as well as a medical-care issue.

Q: What kinds of cases do you handle? Is there such a thing as a typical rape?

A. We see victims of all ages—small children to the oldest victim we had last year, who was 92. They come from every neighborhood, every walk of life, every socioeconomic and ethnic group. They really reflect the reality of rape in this community and in this society. It can happen to anyone.

We see a mixture of stranger rapes and acquaintance rapes. We see victims who come here immediately following a rape, and we also see victims who were raped a long time ago. We see women who were raped months ago, sometimes as many as 50 years ago, who never told anyone when it happened.

The other thing that's striking is that rape happens in every possible kind of situation. A lot of stranger rapes happen in the victim's own home—there are break-ins in the middle of the night. They also happen in parking lots in broad daylight. Sometimes women are kidnaped off the street. They happen in situations that we're all in and places that we all go.

Q: Is there anything in the Westside that's particularly conducive to creating an atmosphere were a rape can occur?

A: I don't think so, but I think in any community there may be locations or situations in which rapes are going to occur.

This is a big beach community so there's always an increase in rape and other violent crimes in summer. A lot of people come to the beach on very hot nights, take a walk on the beach, and they can be attacked under those circumstances.

We also have a large tourist and vulnerable population, especially in summer. And we have several large college campuses—college students are in the highest-risk group for rape.

We have a large homeless population, and many homeless victims. The myth is that homeless people are committing these crimes, but we actually see more homeless people who are victims. We have had a lot of cases with women who are living on the streets with children who are raped in front of their kids, or cases in which the children are also sexually assaulted.

Q: When homeless people go to the police or to someone else for help, are they believed?

A: Yes, but I think the tragedy is that these people have no alternative but to return to the street and to the circumstances in which they remain vulnerable.

Q: Do your victims come from all over Los Angeles?

A: The Rape Treatment Center has no geographic restrictions or limitations on services, so we get victims from all over Los Angeles County. More come from the Western region of Los Angeles County, but because of the unique services we provide they come from far away as well.

Q: Where does the money come from?

A: All the center's services are supported by the community. We receive some donations that come into the hospital, as well as private donations through our own fundraising efforts. We have a broad base of community support, and that enables us to provide services for free, so there's no obstacle to getting help if you're a rape victim.

Q: Do you counsel only women?

A: Yes.

Q: What would you tell a victim?

A: I don't know if I could answer that in a simple way. One issue that some victims come here struggling with is a decision about reporting the rape. Our belief has always been that it's important to report rapes because that's the only way that we're going to be able to stop this violence.

But we also believe that each victim has to make her own decision. We encourage it and we provide the support that helps victims go through that process, but we don't coerce them.

I think that there is more willingness now than there was 10 years ago to report these assaults, but there are very different reporting patterns in stranger and acquaintance rapes.

Q: When did acquaintance rape come into the forefront and become acknowledged as a problem?

A: The center started dealing with acquaintance rape in the late '70s. We began to publicize the issue because we felt there was so much misunderstanding about it.

I think acquaintance rape is the most misunderstood and one of the most prevalent forms of criminal violence in this country. It certainly is the most common form of rape. If you look at police statistics, stranger rape is more prevalent, but in reality acquaintance rape happens far more often. It's just underreported, for understandable reasons.

Q: How have the headline cases—the Mike Tyson and the [William] Kennedy Smith trials—affected public perceptions and the atmosphere here at the center?

A: They have opened up public dialogue about acquaintance rapes. I think that's a positive outcome because it has been a very hidden crime. Until it is out in the open and dealt with we're not going to stop it or solve it.

Q: Are lawsuits becoming a more popular venue for rape victims?.

A: Over the last five to 10 years we've seen an increase in civil suits, mainly lawsuits in which the victim sues a third party for some form of negligence that may have resulted in her being raped. There has been, I think, an increase in using lawsuits against landlords dealing with security issues, against colleges and sometimes lawsuits filed against the offender himself.

Q: How about the legal system? Is the victim still on trial when she goes to court?

A: In a lot of rape cases still, the victim is on trial, and the outcome depends more on how the jury views the victim's behavior than how they evaluate the conduct of the defendant.

People have a lot of misconceptions about rape and those end up influencing decisions jurors make. There are behaviors that are very typical and very common in rape victims that historically have been misinterpreted and used to discredit victims. The most common ones are non-resistance and the absence of physical injuries.

The reality is that in a lot of cases the violence is threatened, not actually inflicted. You can have a gun at your head or a knife at your throat and it doesn't leave a mark. You're still terrorized and you're psychologically traumatized.

But rape trauma doesn't show on the outside and so a lot of people disbelieve the victim—she doesn't have any bruises or broken bones to prove she was in a violent assault.

One of the main concerns I have now is that hospitals are increasingly unwilling to provide treatment for rape victims, and are starting to turn victims away. Many physicians do not want to be involved in a rape investigation, or they don't receive adequate reimbursement, and it's difficult for them to deal with victims who have been through that kind of trauma.

It's primarily a problem in Los Angeles County. Other counties throughout California seem to be more responsive. We're looking at legislation to change this, to increase physicians' reimbursements, and we're putting on a major seminar in June for emergency room personnel to teach them to deal with rape victims.

Q. Should women ever by held responsible for being raped?

A. Never. One of the biggest problems we have with acquaintance rape is that in many cases people don't see it as real rape. They view it as less violent and less damaging.

That's a misconception because acquaintance rape is the same crime as stranger rape—the only difference is the relationship between the victim and the offender. But there is much more of a tendency to blame the victim in an acquaintance rape. That's one of the reasons the victims are less willing to report it.

Another difference is the circumstances in which these crimes occur. A stranger rape is likely to involve a lethal weapon, a gun or a knife used to threaten the victim. In acquaintance rape, usually the force and coercion that are used are just physical—the victim is physically held down or pinned down or forced to submit.

The other really significant difference is that a lot of times people look at acquaintance rape situations in retrospect—which is how we always view them in the courtroom—and conclude that the victim used poor judgment, or should have sensed danger sooner, or should have gotten herself out of the situation or shouldn't have gotten herself into the situation.

I think that we make certain assumptions about people we know, people who go to our schools, people who our friends fixed us up on a date with, people who have a certain status in our society, and we assume those people are safe. We don't expect criminal violence from those kinds of people.

So the case is not just that the victim was careless or reckless, it's just that she trusted the person and really she had no reason not to. A lot of times society blames the victim and also the victim blames herself.

One of the after-effects, one of the strong feelings the victims have after an acquaintance rape is that somehow their judgment failed them and they blame themselves. They feel that somehow they should have foreseen that this person was dangerous when the reality is that often there isn't a signal or a cue before this happens.

Q: Why do men rape?

A: We know a lot more about rapists than we used to. There are many different kinds of sex offenders, and there are differences in the nature of the attack depending on the kind of rapist committing the crime.

The rapes that tend to get the most publicity are the most violent ones, committed by what we call anger rapists or sadistic rapists.

But the most prevalent rapes are the ones that get the least publicity in the media. They are what we call power rapes, where the goal of the offender isn't to physically brutalize the victim, it's to dominate her and have a conquest. Those are the kind of rapes we see on college campuses, among teenagers.

Q. On a societal level, what can be done to prevent rape?

A. Prevention starts with being informed and being educated. As long as we continue to blame the victim we're never going to solve this problem. When a rape occurs, we ask the wrong questions. In these recent highly publicized cases, people were asking, "Why did she go to his house at 2 in the morning?"

In other cases they may ask, "Why did she have a drink?" and so forth. What we should really be asking is, "Why did the offender invite her to his house at two in the morning? Why did he buy her drinks?" We need to focus on the people committing these crimes.

Q. What do you, personally, bring to the Rape Treatment Center?

A. A strong sense of justice, I think, and maybe an ability to take what we learned from victims and translate it into social action and programs and reforms that have created an environment in which victims receive better treatment.

Q. Are you angry?

A. I'm not angry. I'm not a person who's driven by anger. But I have a strong sense of justice and I have always felt that if the public knew what I know and what we see in the cases that come here, things would change.

I have tried to take what we know and what we've learned and bring it to the public's attention. We had a lot of support for the changes we've advocated, whether it's been changing the California rape law, or developing Stuart House for child rape victims because they were suffering so much discrimination and bad treatment.

I feel like I'm giving victims a voice through the actions I take, and empowering them to be part of changing the process.

TRIBUTE TO EMANUEL CATSOULES

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Mr. Emanuel Catsoules of my 17th Congressional District of Ohio.

I am honored to offer Mr. Catsoules my congratulations and thanks for serving the Youngstown City schools as superintendent. Since 1962, Mr. Catsoules has dedicated his energies to improving education for youth in Youngstown.

Starting in 1962 as a teacher at his high school alma mater, Rayen, Mr. Catsoules soon emerged as principal in 1971. However, his contributions to society were yet to begin.

He expanded his horizons to the city level where he was elected city councilman in 1968 and served there through 1975 and again in 1976–77. He also became a part of the Buckeye Association of School Administrators, the Ruben McMillen Library, and the Eastern Orthodox Men's Society, among others.

The pinnacle of Mr. Catsoules' career came in 1978 when he became the superintendent of the Youngtown city schools. In this position, Mr. Catsoules demonstrated outstanding leadership and dedication. I know that his performance was exemplary in times of trouble and innovative at all other times.

Mr. Speaker, I take my hat off to Mr. Catsoules as he retires from his position as superintendent.

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I commend to my colleagues the following editorial which appeared in the Omaha World-Herald on May 12, 1992:

FALSEHOOD ABOUT REAGAN "CUTS" GOES UNCHALLENGED TOO OFTEN

A recent panel discussion at the University of Missouri illustrates why it is hard for the public to get an accurate understanding of inner-city poverty.

An old falsehood is the reason understanding is sometimes difficult. The falsehood has been repeated so often that it has become the truth in the minds of some people. It was repeated again during the Missouri panel discussion.

One member of the panel was Charles Sampson, associate dean of the university's graduate school. A news story about the panel, which appeared in a newspaper trade publication, said he criticized journalists for remaining silent during the presidency of Ronald Reagan. Under Reagan, he alleged, the federal government cut its spending on social programs by 64 percent.

The dean said the cutbacks were largely responsible for racial tensions and other ills of society.

Someone on the panel should have challenged him. The story gave no indication, however, that anyone considered his statements even a little outlandish.

Such too often is the case. The falsehood about slashed social spending has been presented as the truth, accepted as the truth and absorbed into a general misimpression about the problems of the inner cities.

Spending on those programs didn't decrease 64 percent during the Reagan years. It didn't decrease at all. According to the Congressional Budget Office, it rose. From 1981 to 1988, spending on social programs rose 18 percent faster than the rate of inflation.

Not every individual program grew. Some were cut or phased out because they didn't work, or because the money could be spent more effectively in other ways. Other programs, however, grew more than enough to offset any cuts. Spending on Head Start, a popular and effective program for kids, rose 12 percent faster than inflation. Medicaid spending, which pays for health care for welfare recipients, was up 40 percent. The amount spent on leased public housing outpaced inflation by 136 percent.

A few days ago, the White House asked for figures to help evaluate the charge that federal stinginess was to blame for the Los Angeles riots. The Congressional Budget Office confirmed that spending on benefits for poor people has increased $70 billion, a total of 80 percent, during the three years that Bush has been in office.

Perhaps the nation needs a debate over how the vast amounts that are spent on the poor could be more effectively targeted. Perhaps it is time to determine whether health care is soaking up too much of the money, whether more should be diverted into housing, job training or assistance to parents.

But that's a separate debate. The debate that too many people seem to want to have now, unfortunately, starts with a false premise. They have swallowed the notion that programs for the poor have been gutted and that the first order of business should be restoring lost financing.

How does the notion stay alive? The report of Dean Sampson's comments varied so sharply from reality that we telephoned him to see whether he had been misquoted.

The information had come from a book. He mentioned the title and the name of the author. Then he mentioned the date of publication—1982, the first full year of the Reagan presidency.

He had taken a description of a Reagan administration proposal, much of which was subsequently rejected by Congress, and presented it as though it were an after-the-fact report. He not only said that the cuts had occurred but went on to blame them for racial tension and other social problems.

It's no wonder that the general public sometimes has trouble getting an accurate picture. When academic leaders have trouble with the facts, and journalists don't challenge them, the chances of a straight story getting out are often slim, indeed.

SALUTE TO NANCY BENDER

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to honor a good friend and an outstanding leader of her community as she marks 10 years of service as executive director of the Simi Valley Chamber of Commerce.

During her decade of service, Nancy Bender has played a major role in building the business community of Simi Valley. I'd like to take a few moments to list some of her many accomplishments:

The Simi Valley Chamber was accredited by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

She created a strong working relationship between city leaders and the business community.

She has worked with local and State agencies to promote and attract clean industry and commercial businesses to Simi Valley.

She established the governmental review council to help the chamber act on proposed legislation in a timely manner and to provide strong leadership and direction on legislative and local issues.

She created the transportation management association to help companies comply with the State's tough antismog laws.

She created the Leadership Simi Valley program.

And under her leadership, the Simi Valley Chamber was named one of the 10 best chambers in cities of fewer than 200,000 people in the entire Nation.

I have been privileged to know and work with Nancy for many years, including serving together on the Simi Valley City Council. She is truly a special person, and I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting her for her many accomplishments.

H.R. 5132, A HELPING HAND IS ALL THEY NEED

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, 2 weeks ago the city of Los Angeles was ravaged by the worst civil strife our country has ever known. The headlines are staggering: 59 people dead and an estimated $700 million in damage. These are numbers so large that they cannot be captured by a few minutes of TV news. Only by walking through the area can one grasp the despair and destruction caused by the riots. We must come to grips with what this tragic event meant to ordinary people. Some lost everything they owned, everything they had worked for, everything they had hoped would support their family in the years to come. Some had worked all their lives to get to where they were, only to lose everything in one brief explosion of blind fury.

In this time of true disaster, our Nation has come together to help these people in need. One day after a request from Governor Pete Wilson, the President declared the county of Los Angeles a Federal disaster area. The very next day the disaster field office opened to coordinate the recovery effort. Since that time, seven fully staffed disaster assistance offices have opened throughout the L.A. county area, and the first check is already in the mail. Over 4,000 people have registered for State and Federal assistance in the past week in these offices, and I am sure that number will continue to grow. There remains one problem. The damage caused by the L.A. riots far exceeds the amount of Federal money available to provide relief for those in need. For this reason Congress has taken quick action in bringing a bill to the floor, H.R. 5132, to assure that those who were hurt in these disasters will be helped.

H.R. 5132, the dire emergency supplemental appropriations for disaster relief, "provides the funds to cover the estimated disaster costs for the L.A. County riots. Specifically, it would appropriate $495 million in emergency funds for Small Business Administration [SBA] disaster loans and Federal Emergency Management Agency [FEMA] disaster assistance.

This bill is not a partisan issue, it is not a regional issue. It is an effort by the Federal Government to lend a helping hand to those ravaged by disasters.

The SBA Disaster Assistance Loan Program is a productive, financially prudent program that helps people help themselves. Through the SBA, the Federal Government provides low interest loans to cover uninsured losses from a disaster. These loans provide the seed money for the eventual rebuilding of devastated communities. With these loans, individuals are able to go back to their neighborhoods to reopen businesses and rebuild houses. This money will turn gutted buildings into thriving stores, devastated neighborhoods into livable communities. It will bring back the jobs to our damaged city. The Government and the taxpayers reap substantial benefits by providing seed money to rebuild communities. People get back on their feet, get off public assistance, and eventually return to productive, taxpaying employment.

The bill also provides $300 million to FEMA for disaster assistance grants for those people who lost property in the riot, but do not qualify for SBA loans. Through no fault of their own the people least able to cope with an economic loss were severely hurt by the riots. FEMA provides a modest grant to help them get back on their feet.

By stepping in now, the Federal Government assures that communities ravaged by disasters return as vibrant, productive assets to our State and Nation. The people in my city have been through so much in the last few weeks, H.R. 5132 will help them on the road toward recovery.

CLAUD A. MORRISON CONCLUDES 21 YEARS OF SERVICE ON TUSCALOOSA CITY BOARD OF EDUCATION

HON. CLAUDE HARRIS

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, a long-time community leader and friend, Claud Morrison, is retiring from the the Tuscaloosa city board of education after 21 years. His active membership in all aspects of the board and particularly his participation on the financial and building committees have contributed to the growth and strength of our community's public education system.

As a native Alabamaian and graduate of the University of Alabama, Claud has been a public accountant in Tuscaloosa since 1951. As someone who takes his citizenship seriously, Claud has been involved in many community, civic, and religious organizations. His commitment to hard work is not unknown to those of us in Tuscaloosa. Besides his successful CPA practice, Claud has devoted his talents to memberships on the Tuscaloosa Park and Recreation Board, the Tuscaloosa Exchange Club, the Dollar-Hide Hunting Club, and serving as a deacon at the First Baptist Church.

Although Claud has earned a reputation for lending his support to many worthwhile causes in the Tuscaloosa community, he has never forgotten the importance of his family. He and his wife, Sue, have two married sons and share in the enjoyment of being grandparents to 6 grandchildren.

I join with the Tuscaloosa business community and private sector in expressing our gratitude to Claud Morrison for his wise and thoughtful leadership as a member of the board of education. His conviction that a strong public education foundation builds a stronger America is a legacy that we should all try to emulate.

THE CONGRESSIONAL REFORM MOST NEEDED

HON. ANDREW JACOBS, JR.

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, the following is this year's winning essay in our annual contest to determine who will be the congressional intern for the 10th District of Indiana. It was written by Rob King of Indianapolis.

THE CONGRESSIONAL REFORM MOST NEEDED

The recent surge in popular dissatisfaction with Congress, exacerbated by the checking abuses at the House Bank, has put the subject of Congressional reform on the minds of our country's lawmakers once again. Some of the current suggestions being bandied about in revisionist minded circles (aside from an overhaul of the House Bank) deal with term limitations, negative campaigning, gerrymandering, and the improvement of voter participation. While all of these subjects necessitate legislative attention, the most needed Congressional reform lies in the arena of campaign finance.

In the heavily regulated presidential elections, public funds account for a substantial portion of a candidate's financing. Additionally, candidates for executive office are subject to expenditure limits. Congressional elections however, are privately financed with candidates subject to no spending limits. Obviously, with this latter system, the danger exists of electing a candidate on the basis of his larger campaign coffer, instead of his platform.

Thus, the absence of spending limits for Congressional campaigns often metamorphoses these races into wars of money, rather than ideology. Quite simply, more money in today's political milieu means more media exposure. Media exposure translates into voter recognition, an essential prerequisite to winning a Congressional election. Hence, without money, a candidate's electoral prospects are doomed.

Confronted with this reality, candidates often find themselves taking money from political action committees (PACs). Much of the current debate over campaign finance reform hinges on the role PACs play in elections. PACs are established by unions, corporations, and trade associations, as well as ideological and issue oriented groups. Because PACs have access to large reservoirs of cash, relationships between them and political candidates invariably result. Unfortunately, these relationships frequently allow PACs undue influence in Congress, as is manifested by the recent Keating Five scandal. Writes Inside Congress reporter Chuck Alston in his February 2, article, "The Keating Five scandal has exposed how campaign contributions can govern behavior in Congress."

Our present campaign finance system also needs revamping because it favors incumbents. This is imputable to the fact that incumbents receive the bulk of PAC money. PACs like to reward Congressmen who have supported their policies in the past and who will continue to do so in the future. By filling an incumbent's campaign coffer, a PAC ensures continued representation in Congress. Thus, an incumbent can easily marshal the financial resources necessary for his Congressional campaign through his PAC connections. His opponent, conversely, is left facing the daunting challenge of fund raising without PAC assistance. Compounding this inequity is the greater visibility incumbents have, which enables them to raise individual donations much more easily than their opponents.

As a result of these pecuniary advantages enjoyed by incumbents, challengers are unable to compete. In the 1990 elections, incumbent U.S. Senators raised four dollars to every one raised by their opponents. Even more astonishingly, U.S. Representatives running for reelection were able to raise twelve dollars for every one raised by their opponents.

At issue here is whether this Congressional electoral process, with its heavy reliance on money appropriated by PACs, undermines the basic democratic principles of equal access to public office for all citizens and equal opportunity for all segments of society to be heard by those making public policy. Realistically, under the present system, money has become the primary factor in gaining both voter and legislative attention. Clearly, this is wrong. Thinking of this problem, I am reminded of what Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. once said: "A man should be judged not by the color of his skin, but by the content of his character." Similarly, as citizens of this great land, we should judge our elected officials, not by the largess of the campaign coffers, but by the contents of their character and the value of their messages. Only when we do this will America truly realize its democratic potential.

NUTRITION SCREENING RESEARCH ACT

HON. MARILYN LLOYD

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation, the Nutrition Screening Research Act, to attack the devastating problem of malnutrition among older adults. I am joined in sponsoring this bill by two distinguished advocates for the elderly: Representative RON WYDEN and Representative TOM DOWNEY. This legislation has been introduced in the Senate by Senators ADAMS and BINGAMAN.

Mr. Speaker, a recent study conducted by Peter D. Hart Research Associates found that 40 percent of older patients in acute care and long-term care facilities are malnourished. The cost of malnutrition in human suffering and additional medical services is simply unacceptable to me. We must do the research now so that we can determine the most effective ways to prevent malnutrition in the future.

The Nutrition Screening Research Act will authorize research to be conducted by the Secretary of Health and Human Services through the National Institute on Aging. There will be two 3-year studies conducted. The first will determine the efficacy and cost effectiveness of nutrition screening and intervention activities. This study will shed some light on how such screening can affect the health and quality of life of older Americans, and whether we can reduce unnecessary institutionalization with proper nutrition screening and by providing needed nutrition.

The second study addresses the issue of malnutriton. This study will provide Congress with a true reading of the extent that older individuals are malnourished in our society. It will focus on persons in hospitals and long-term care facilities, as well as persons living independently. The study will also assess the need for nutrition screening and intervention programs.

There is a related nutrition issue that I would like to mention. There are thousands of nutrition providers across this Nation serving the elderly under the Older Americans Act, who are extremely anxious and disturbed that the Senate has not passed this year's Older Americans Act reauthorization. It is unfair for service providers and the elderly to live with such uncertainty regarding their reimbursement levels and the number of meals they will be able to provide. I hope that we can get this critical legislation passed and signed into law immediately.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have a short description of the Nutrition Research Screening Act, and a list of organizations that support the bill placed in the RECORD at this time, and I ask that my colleagues join me in supporting this bill.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE NUTRITION SCREENING RESEARCH ACT

Section 1. (Short Title) entitles the bill, the Nutrition Screening Research Act.

Section 2. (Findings and Purposes) presents findings related to malnutrition in the elderly. These findings indicate that malnutrition is pervasive in the older population and that a national study of nutrition screening and interventions could provide the basis for institutionalizing these activities.

Presents the purposes of the legislation: to provide for research to determine the efficacy and cost-effectiveness of nutrition screening and intervention activities in older people and to determine the extent of malnutrition in the elderly.

Section 3. (Research) calls for two studies. One study is to determine the efficacy and cost effectiveness of nutrition screening and intervention activities. This three-year study is to be conducted by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the National Institute on Aging, coordinating with the Agency for Health Care Policy and Research and, to the extent possible, working in cooperation with the National Nutrition Monitoring System.

The study will determine if nutrition screening and intervention activities for older individuals result in changes in health or quality of life for those individuals or in reductions in federally subsidized home or institutional care. It also will determine if a multidisciplinary nutritional approach is effective in addressing the nutritional needs of older individuals and if reimbursement for nutrition screening and interventions is a cost-effective means of improving the health status of older people.

The populations in the study include older people who are: (1) living independently, including those receiving family support or home and community-based services and those who do not have additional services and support; (2) hospitalized, including individuals admitted from home and from institutions; and, (3) institutionalized.

The second study, the Malnutrition Study, is a three-year study to be conducted by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the National Institute on Aging. it will determine the extent of malnutrition in older people in hospitals and long-term care facilities and in older individuals who are living independently.

A report of the findings of the studies shall be submitted by the Secretary of Health and Human Services to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives. This report also will include a determination regarding the institutionalization of a nutrition screening and intervention program. The rationale for the determination also is to be presented.

An Advisory Panel is to be established by the Secretary, acting through the Director of the National Institute on Aging, to oversee the design, implementation and evaluation of the studies. The members are to be appointed for the life of the panel from organizations including, but not limited to, the Health Care Financing Administration, the Social Security Administration, the National Center for Health Statistics, the Administration on Aging, the National Council on the Aging, the American Dietetic Association, and the American Academy of Family Physicians.

Compensation for panel members who are not federal government employees is specified. Panel members also are to receive travel expenses related to panel business.

The panel may request that the head of any federal agency assign, without reimbursement, any agency personnel to assist the panel in carrying out its duties.

The panel shall terminate 3 years after the date of enactment of this legislation.

Section 4. (Authorization of Appropriations) authorizes such sums as necessary to carry out this legislation to be appropriated and not less than $3 million for each of the fiscal years 1993 through 1995.

GANG-FREE SCHOOLS AND COMMUNITIES ACT OF 1992

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, together with Mr. MARTINEZ, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Resources, Mr. FORD of Michigan, the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, Mr. FAWELL, the ranking Republican of the Subcommittee on Human Resources, Mrs. LOWEY of New York, and Mr. DE LUGO, I am introducing the Gang-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1992.

This bill authorizes $25 million to enable the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention [OJJDP] to makes grants directly to local school districts, other local public and private agencies, institutions, and organizations to support a broad variety of juvenile gang prevention and intervention programs. In making grants, the Administrator of OJJDP is required to give priority consideration to applicants which: First, are submitted by or substantially involve local school districts; second, are broadly supported in their communities; third, substantially involve the families of youth who are or may become gang members; and fourth are based on the incidence and severity of gang related crime in their respective communities.

We are all aware of the serious problems faced by large cities like Los Angeles where gang related killings rose from 317 in 1987 to 619 in 1990. But smaller cities have also seen a substantial growth in crimes committed by members of juvenile gangs. Thirty years ago, there was evidence of street gang activity in only 23 cities. By contrast, recent research found evidence of street gang operations in 187 cities.

The Gang-Free Schools and Communities Act is designed to complement and expand existing Federal, State, and local efforts to address a difficult and increasingly serious problem. To date, the principal Federal responses have been law enforcement measures. During the last year, the Department of Justice, through the Office of Justice Programs, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms, substantially increased its intelligence and enforcement efforts.

While law enforcement is doing its job by cracking down on illegal gang activities, we must also ensure that local communities, through their public and private agencies and organizations, have other resources to cooperate and do their part. The causes and problems associated with gangs are complex and require comprehensive solutions.

As former chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Resources and the current chairman of the Subcommittee on Elementary, Secondary, and Vocational Education, I am very aware that youth who are or may become gang members are frequently educationally disadvantaged and that older adolescents may need access to education instruction outside of the regular school classroom. These educational services, when coordinated with social and mental health services available through community-based youth services organizations and other public agencies, can become powerful gang prevention/intervention tools. Youth who are, or may become, gang members must have access to these kinds of comprehensive services if we want them to participate in lawful, constructive activities and to make safe and healthy decisions about their futures.

TRIBUTE TO DR. ROBERT H. RINES, PRESIDENT OF FRANKLIN PIERCE LAW CENTER

HON. DICK SWETT

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. SWETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Dr. Robert H. Rines and his tenure as founder and president of Franklin Pierce Law Center in Concord, NH. Dr. Rines has been a leader in the field of patent and intellectual property law, both nationally and internationally. As an intellectual property lawyer, he has represented many inventors in the successful commercialization of their inventions.

In 1973, Dr. Rines founded Franklin Pierce Law Center as an institution designed to make legal education more relevant to the needs of the public and private sectors in dealing with technological advances in a changing world. As part of that mission, he has specialized in the training of attorneys in the field of science and relationship to the law through the Academy of Applied Science and the Germeshausen Center for the law of innovation and entrepreneurship.

Born in Boston, Dr. Rines received a B.S. in physics from MIT in 1942 and a J.D. from Georgetown in 1947 after serving in the Army in World War II. A registered professional engineer, he has also received a Ph.D. from Chiao Tung University and an honorary L.L.D. from the New England School of Law. Dr. Rines' leadership in the field of science, technology and the law, and his leadership in helping to develop patents and inventions in electronics and sonar, have been recognized widely over the years.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute Dr. Rines and his accomplishments as a lawyer, scientist and educator.

WINNEBAGO DDU WINS PUBLIC SERVICE AWARD

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member is pleased to congratulate the drug dependency unit [DDU] in the Winnebago Indian Health Service Hospital on receiving the very prestigious 1992 Public Service Excellence Award in the Federal category. The Winnebago Hospital is located in Nebraska's First Congressional District.

This Member is well aware of the long list of accomplishments of the drug dependency program at the Winnebago Hospital, which will be referred to as the Winnebago DDU. This program serves both the Winnebago and Omaha Tribes in addition to many other native Americans from throughout the Nation.

The drug dependency service unit employs 7 people and is a 12-bed facility that serves approximately 100 people a year. Mr. Robert Hallowell has been the director of the drug dependency service unit for 5 years.

The DDU has an amazingly high success rate when compared with other programs that treat native Americans. It is reported that it has a 50-percent success rate in treating alcohol and substance abuse while non-Indian treatment programs serving Indian people have a zero- to 5-percent success rate. Not only is the DDU the first adult in-patient substance abuse program in the Indian Health Service system, it also has the highest success rate of programs assisting native Americans.

The Winnebago and Omaha Tribes created this unit to help stem an extraordinarily serious problem in Indian country. The tragic results of alcoholism and substance abuse can be seen throughout the United States, and especially among Indian people. the Winnebago DDU has developed an innovative treatment program for native Americans that deserves to be considered elsewhere.

The DDU provides several special treatment programs for native Americans that other Indian Health Service chemical treatment centers do not have. For example, the Winnebago DDU routinely treats native Americans for diabetes and alcoholism within the same program. In addition, there is a special effort to treat pregnant women for alcoholism in order to combat fetal alcohol syndrome and fetal alcohol effect. In addition, there is an integral program to fight domestic violence—to provide treatment both to the perpetrator and the victim.

The DDU is unique among Indian Health Service substance abuse units in that it is located in a hospital. This allows for comprehensive service to respond to the complex needs of the clients. Since the DDU is operated within the hospital, a wide range of services can be provided that clinics alone cannot provide.

This Member is not surprised that the Winnebago DDU received this award. Their hard work, caring spirit, and perseverance in the midst of adversity have served very will the native Americans of Nebraska and other States.

SALUTE TO MANAGEMENT WEEK

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize the men and women who keep the wheels of industry and commerce moving in our great Nation as we observe Management Week in America.

Management Week is sponsored every year by the National Management Association, an organization dedicated to making our managers even more productive through professional development. The group believes there is no substitute for attaining the highest level of professionalism in each of the many fields of management—a credo, by the way, that we could all learn from.

Since its inception in 1978, Management Week in America has grown in recognition and activities each succeeding year. Every year, leaders of our country proclaim the first week in June as a time to recognize the profession of management and to appreciate the contribution and dedication that millions of managers offer in support of our free enterprise system.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to pay special recognition to the Rockwell Valley chapter of the NMA. The chapter is a nonprofit organization of roughly 1,100 members from Rockwell International's Rocketdyne, Science Center, and Digital Communications Divisions. Its members work in several portions of my 21st District, including Canoga Park, Westlake Village, Thousand Oaks, Santa Susana, and Newbury Park.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring Management Week in America, June 1–6.

TRIBUTE TO LEE-ANN HEVEY

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to congratulate Lee-Ann Hevey, of Pawtucket, as this year's recipient of the Congressman Ronald K. Machtley Academic and Leadership Excellence Award for Shea High School in Pawtucket, RI.

This award is presented to the student, chosen by Shea High School, who demonstrates a mature blend of academic achievement, community involvement and leadership qualities.

Lee-Ann Hevey has more than fulfilled this criteria. She is a member of the National and Rhode Island Societies. She is also active in extra-curricular activities. She is a member of the swim team, the volleyball team and a writer for the yearbook. She is a Presidential Fitness Award Winner and participated in Project Close-Up.

I commend Lee-Ann Hevey for her outstanding achievements and wish her all the best in her future endeavors.

IN HONOR OF DR. ERNST KATZ

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor Dr. Ernst Katz, founder and conductor of the Junior Philharmonic Orchestra [JPO] of California for his 55 years of dedicated service on the podium. This makes the Junior Philharmonic the only 55-year-old orchestra with its original conductor and also the oldest young people's symphony in the West. He will be honored on May 27, 1992, at the Scottish Rite Auditorium in Los Angeles.

While Dr. Katz has been a leader in numerous projects relating to music, his work has never lost the focus of young people. His projects show his dedication to his orchestra's motto: "Give Youth a Chance To Be Heard." Since January 22, 1937, the date Dr. Katz founded the JPO, this devoted American has volunteered to provide musical training, education, and a musical library at no charge to thousands of our youth. He has done so without government subsidy. Under his direction, the Junior Philharmonic is completely noncommercial and does not ask for contributions, while volunteering hundreds of performances raising millions of dollars for many recognized charities.

The story of the JPO also relates an important part of their history with a close affiliation to most of Hollywood's motion picture, television, and radio personalities. Upon being founded, the Junior Philharmonic created the celebrity "Battle of Batons" featuring Hollywood's biggest names conducting the JPO in competition. The most humorous event is crowned each year with the awarding of the coveted Golden Baton. Hundreds of performers have participated in the "Battle" including their most recent winner, "Weird Al" Yankovick. Others who have conducted the JPO include Jack Benny, Chevy Chase, Henry Fonda, Jayne Mansfield, Cesar Romero, Yakov Smirnoff, and many others.

Dr. Katz has provided teenagers from all backgrounds with musical training, and more importantly, guidance and motivation to become productive member so four society. The many thousands who participate in the JPO do so at a most impressionable young age when drugs and other less wholesome lifestyles clamor for their attention. He takes a personal interest in all youth, providing the guidance and attention that this often sorely missing at home and at school. As an outspoken critic of drug use, he firmly believes that the best deterrent to the drug problem is participation in a musical aggregation; for 55 years he has provided that opportunity.

It is an honor to bring to the attention of my colleagues in the House of Representatives the significant achievements of this remarkable man. I ask that you join me in expressing praise and gratitude for his work with young people and the community, and to wish Dr. Katz good health and many years of continued contributions to our community and our Nation.

TRIBUTE TO J. PHILLIP RICHLEY

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise here today to pay tribute to J. Phillip Richley, a man who has served the people of the Mahoning Valley for over 30 years. J. Phillip Richley will now receive, among his many other awards, the 1992 Distinguished Citizen Award presented by the Alumni Association of the Youngstown State University.

Born in Roccanova, Italy, J. Phillip Richley's family came to the Town of Niles, OH, in my 17th Congressional District. After graduating from Niles McKinley High School in 1954, J. Phillip Richley attended Youngstown State University. He also graduated from the U.S. Navy Quartermaster School and the U.S. Naval Academy Prep School.

Mr. Richley's career mirrors a Horatio Alger story from the past. An immigrant's son, J. Phillip Richley began his rise to the ranks of mayor in 1950 when he started as a surveyor for the city of Youngstown. In 1971, Governor John J. Gilligan appointed J. Phillip Richley the director of the Ohio Department of Transportation. Then in 1978, the people of Youngstown elected J. Phillip Richley to be mayor of Youngstown, at a time when the city boomed with people and steel mills.

Aside his civic duties, J. Phillips Richley serves in several boards and councils. He devotes much of his time to economic development and transportation planning. While director of transportation he was responsible for the administration of planning, design, construction, operation, and maintenance of 18,000 miles of the State and Federal highway system in Ohio.

Currently, J. Phillip Richley is the vice president of Development for the Cafaro Co. His responsibilities include administration and management of the planning, design and financing of regional shopping malls and centers throughout the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that I join his wife Josephine and his children, Phyllis and John in congratulating J. Phillip on receiving this coveted award from the Youngstown State University Alumni Association.

NASA ASTRONAUTS "ENDEAVOUR" TO PERSEVERE

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the entire world witnessed human ingenuity, courage, and skill of the highest caliber. At 5:15 p.m. astronauts Pierre Thuot, Richard Hieb, and Thomas Akers stepped into space to implement an emergency satellite rescue plan that they helped conceive. I would like to pay tribute to the crew of Endeavour and all those who contributed to this successful rescue effort. This mission marks the first time in history that three humans have ever space walked simultaneously. Their mission was to snare and secure the runaway Intelsat, a state-of-the-art communications satellite which had eluded two previous capture attempts. This third and final attempt did not rely on a $7 million high-technology grappling hook, but rather on the gloved hands of the astronauts themselves. These brave men placed themselves in great danger and exhibited supreme control and coordination as they gingerly held the massive satellite in place. Four and one-half painstaking hours later, Intelsat was safety attached to the Endeavour's robot arm, and the necessary repairs where underway.

Such creative problem solving accomplished in the most extreme environment of space represents the best of the human spirit. Just a couple of weeks ago, we voted to continue manned missions into space through our support of the space station, which will serve as the centerpiece of our manned space program. This latest rescue operation is sure to provide invaluable practical experience for our future excursions into space, and once again illustrates the importance of manned space flight. I applaud the remarkable efforts of the Endeavour team, and wish them good luck and God's speed as they complete their mission and return home.

RECOGNIZING THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE EMPIRE STATESMEN

HON. FRANK HORTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the tremendous accomplishments and continuing achievement of the World Champion Empire Statesmen of Rochester, NY.

The Empire Statesmen, New York's senior drum and bugle corps, is a 110-member corps celebrating its 10th anniversary. The Statesmen are directed by Mr. Vincent Bruni, who I am pleased to have known for many years. Mr. Bruni, an internationally acclaimed choreographer, has guided the Statesmen through their first decade, a time that has seen the group grow from a mere idea into a world champion corps.

Under Mr. Bruni's direction, the corps has received many accolades. Some of the corps accomplishments include performing at Rich Stadium for the Buffalo Bills, in Toronto for the Blue Jays, and opening and leading the 1986 Mardi Gras parade in New Orleans. The Statesmen have also performed charity concerts in the Greater Rochester area for the families of children with cancer.

Recently, the Statesmen captured the 1991 Drug Corps Associates World Championships, which were held last September in Scranton, PA. This championship performance resulted in the Statesmen being invited to perform at the final game of the European Soccer Championships in Goteberg, Sweden this June. The Statesmen are the only American unit selected to participate in the World Cup festivities, and they have also been asked to continuously promote the 1994 World Cup Soccer Championships to be held in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, we in upstate New York are extremely proud to call the Empire Statesmen our own. I congratulate them on their outstanding achievement and wish them the best of luck in Sweden.

SELF-EMPLOYED TAX DEDUCTION FOR HEALTH INSURANCE COSTS

HON. PAT WILLIAMS

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that would provide equity for farmers and ranchers along with all other self-employed taxpayers by giving them 100-percent deductibility of health insurance costs which would be retroactive to December 31, 1991.

The current 25-percent health insurance cost tax deduction has been extended twice. It is high time that we make the tax deduction permanent and expand the deduction to 100 percent of health insurance costs. This puts sole proprietors on the same level as their competitors who are organized as C corporations and are able to take advantage of full deductibility of these same health costs.

The cost of health care and health insurance premiums has escalated over the last decade. In 1990, the United States spent $666 billion on health care. The private sector paid roughly $380 billion or 58 percent of national health expenditures. Meanwhile, the farmers and ranchers all over the country have had some tough economic times. In Montana the 1980's were accompanied by drought and increased Federal regulations. Montana alone has over 20,000 farm and ranch families that would benefit from this legislation.

My bill, along with providing an even playing field for sole proprietorships, gives them the incentive to furnish employer-provided health insurance for their employees. With some 30 million folks who are uninsured in this country that is a worthwhile goal all by itself.

I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort to provide equitable tax treatment and an incentive to ensure adequate health coverage by cosponsoring this bill. We ought to be encouraging self-employed taxpayers to provide sufficient health care coverage for themselves, their families, and employees.

JOEL STEPHAN ANTES—UTAH WINNER OF THE "VOICE OF DEMOCRACY" ESSAY CONTEST

HON. JAMES V. HANSEN

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, each year, the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States and its Ladies Auxiliary conduct its "Voice of Democracy" broadcast scriptwriting contest.

This program allows students all across the country to express their views on vital national issues and to develop their writing skills. Out of the 147,000 students who participated this year, only 22 were chosen as finalists. Each finalist will share $76,000 in scholarships from the VFW to help in furthering their education.

I am proud, Mr. Speaker, to note that one of these 22 students was 16-year-old Joel Stephan Antes, from Layton High School in Layton, UT.

MEETING AMERICA'S CHALLENGE

My Challenge is just ahead. The strange rows of old world houses flit by to the steady pounding of my feet on the cobblestones. The straggling line of runners turn the last corner and two things loom ahead, the great gate of the stadium and the sweat soaked number across the back of the one runner between me and the gold medal. As we pass into the shade of the tunnel a gate opens in my heart, the burden of twenty six miles falls from me, my muscles leap and I shoot past my staggering opponent and into the blinding sun and deafening roar of 120 thousand spectators. I surge around the track toward the finish line and turn the great bend into the sun. The roar grows deafening. I raise my arms to break the ribbon * * *

Splat. A wall of muddy slush covers me, the bright head lights of a car swerve past with a honk and a jeer to disappear into small red tail lights in the drizzle of the early morning dark. I've been jerked back to the reality of my before-school run, the cold dark of my home town in dingy late winter. But even as I dodge the rotting snow banks and splash the edges of the black-water slush pools the vision of Olympic gold begins once again to grow in my mind. My burning determination to meet that distant challenge brings strength to my muscles, and resolve to my heart.

America, too, holds a challenge in its heart. A distant prize, a time when all men can be free at last, a dream of life, liberty and happiness for all. The inalienable rights of men are like rare and distant gold medals to a runner. Only by providing them to all these people will we be "Meeting America's Challenge".

Our nation faces many obstacles, even as a runner must face the morning cold and aching muscles. But obstacles can be over come on the way to victory with America's challenge to inspire us. Our nation is not perfect, there is a lot of flab, soft spots, our lungs are clouded. I will speak directly to four obstacles that stand between America and its challenge.

First crime. It is like a cancer in the tissue of our society. Our national body is addicted to the poison of drugs and the crime and killing they bring. "The Unesco Courier" reports a robbery every fifty five seconds, an aggravated assault every forty nine, a murder every twenty four minutes.

A second obstacle between America and its challenge, is like poor nutrition to a marathoner. It is poverty. The United States is the world's richest nation yet over thirty million people live below the poverty level. People in poverty while many live in an excess that allows us to waste so much.

This waste ties directly to a third weakness. The destruction of our environment. In its study of "Our Dying Planet" Time magazine reveals Americans as wealthy wasters. Six percent of the world's population we consume fifty percent of the resources used each year. And we squander these treasures. There are thousands of landfills, open sores filling faster than we can cut new ones. Each year Americans cast aside 220 million tires, 1.6 billion ballpoint pens, 2 billion razors, and 16 billion disposable diapers: 22 and a half billion pounds of waste a year. Filled with trash we can not meet the challenge.

Finally, like any athlete Americans face problems of the mind. Here our nation's education system fails. The refusal to support education has led not to cutting fat, but the arteries of learning. Student scores and skills crumble in a world where success in education does not mean excellence it means survival.

In the early morning cold it's no good to lie in the warm covers and make excuses. I refuse to consider the idea I will not win olympic gold. To meet that challenge I throw myself into the task. America must demand discipline. Flaws must not become excuses. Overcoming them will give us strength. The challenge lies ahead. Our inalienable rights, our government of, by and for the people, our day when all men will be free at last. These dreams of America's founders, these words of Lincoln and King are more than platitudes they embody the golden challenge that we must strive to meet. As we dodge the icy puddles and face the cold drizzle in the dark let's keep our eyes on these golden dreams, on meeting America's challenge.

Noted for his outstanding business accomplishments, Mr. Rose is honored this year as an outstanding community leader and exemplary mark on the radio and television industry.

IN HONOR OF MARVIN LENDER

HON. ROSA L. DeLAURO

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, this week people from all over Connecticut will come together to pay tribute to a unique individual who has made outstanding contributions to his community at the local, national, and international levels. I join Marvin Lender's many friends and colleagues in recognizing his tremendous achievements.

In addition to his extremely successful business career, Marvin Lender has always been a leader in helping others. As he retires from his successful term as national chairman of the United Jewish Appeal, he is completing just one more chapter in a long series of achievements that have made a difference in many lives worldwide. He has encouraged others to give to those less fortunate than themselves and led by his own example, generously dedicating his time and talents to helping those most in need. Within the United Jewish Appeal, he has served in many capacities, from helping Soviet and Ethiopian Jews emigrate to Israel to raising money for local charities. His efforts have improved the lives of Jews in the United States, Israel, and all over the world.

Mr. Lender's leadership has also extended beyond the Jewish community, touching the lives of many throughout the New Haven area. He has lent his vision and expertise to Yale New Haven Hospital as well as the New Haven Chapter of the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation. As cochairman of the New Haven Holocaust and Prejudice Reduction Program, he helps to educate schoolchildren in order to diminish racial and ethnic tensions in our community.

In every way, Marvin Lender has been an outstanding citizen and a role model to us all. All of us in Connecticut owe him our gratitude and deep admiration. We are truly proud of him. I am confident that he will continue to lend his enormous talents and commitment to our community in the years to come.

JAMES MYERS CHOSEN AS ALABAMA'S STATE SMALL BUSINESS PERSON OF THE YEAR

HON. CLAUDE HARRIS

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Mr. James N. Myers, president of Jim Myers Drug, Inc., in Tuscaloosa, AL, on being chosen the 1992 State Small Business Person of the Year. This week is America's 29th Annual Small Business Week, a time to recognize our Nation's small business men and women and their accomplishments. On May 12, I attended a luncheon here in Washington honoring Mr. Myers and other State small business persons.

Jim Myers has been serving the public for years through his business and community service. By providing quality products and care, he has come to exemplify success for small business people as they continue to help build America's future.

I would like to commend Mr. Myers for his loyalty and contributions to Tuscaloosa, and again, congratulate him on being selected Alabama's Small Business Person of the Year.

NATIONAL POLICE WEEK

HON. CHARLES E. SCHUMER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, in recognition of National Police Week, and the National Peace Officers' Memorial Service held today, May 15, we pay respects to the brave men and women in law enforcement who lost their lives in the performance of their duties. Last year, we lost 118 of our gallant officers.

Every year, the names of these men and women who gave their lives in service to their country are enshrined in the National Law Enforcement Officers Memorial in Washington, DC. This memorial already includes the names of more than 12,500 Federal, State, and local law enforcement officers killed in the line of duty since the existence of organized police in our country. When you begin to consider the number of living victims—wives, husbands, children, families—one can begin to understand the level of anguish felt across the country for those who make this ultimate sacrifice.

As we somberly remember those law enforcement officers who gave their lives, we must recommit ourselves to protecting the hundreds of thousands of brave officers who daily make enormous sacrifices in performing vital service to these United States.

IN RECOGNITION OF KURDISH HUMAN RIGHTS AND THE UPCOMING ELECTIONS

HON. JAMES H. BILBRAY

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise before you today to appraise the Members of this House about the dire situation that continues to rage in the Kurdish occupied areas of the northern Iraq.

There continues to be nearly a million refugees stranded in the peaks of the treacherous Iraqi/Turkish border with the very real fear that death is what they face if they return to their homes. It is only the continued presence of the United Nations and overflights by our American planes, that has kept the Iraqi Army at bay and allowed these people a slight measure of security and safety.

However, a deadline is looming. Next month the United Nations mandate in that area will expire and what will follow will surely be a genocide of the Kurdish people. Saddam Hussein has had no qualms about expressing his disdain for the Kurdish people through gassing the town of Habladja and the continued slaughter of innocent women and children.

Yet, we now have the opportunity to bring to the Bush administrations notice an historic event. This Sunday, May 17, the Kurdish people will take an historic step toward expressing their desire to be part of the democratic community by holding parliamentary and presidential elections. In this way, they hope to provide the world with concise proof that what we have is a freedom-loving people who want the same guarantees of freedom and security that the rest of the democratic world shares.

At this time, a delegation of congressional staff members, foreign affairs specialists and human rights activists have departed for Turkey in order to travel into the Kurdish areas and observe these elections. Led by the former two-time Governor of Nevada and current editor of the Las Vegas Sun Mike O'Callahan, this delegation will report back to myself and other Members of Congress about the continued plight of these people and the need to afford them continued security.

Currently I have introduced legislation before the Congress, with the cosponsorship of Chairman DANTE FASCELL, LEE HAMILTON, and STEPHEN SOLARZ, that will express the sense of Congress that the United Nations presence should be extended and that this conflict should be resolved once and for all in order to afford these people the security that they deserve. I urge my colleagues to support House Concurrent Resolution 299 and call for its immediate enactment.

I would also like to submit for the RECORD today's article from the New York Times which covers the upcoming election so that my fellow members will be aware of the historic events occurring in the region. I urge them not only to read this article but to make the choice to support an end to the violence perpetrated against these people.

IRAQI KURDS PREPARE FOR FIRST FREE ELECTIONS

(By Leslie Weaver)

Erbil, Iraq, May 12.—With campaign, rallies, parades, slogans and speeches, Kurds in northern Iraq are gearing up for their first free elections outside of Iraqi control.

"This election is the first historical chance for the Kurdish people to determine their future," said Jalal Talabani, one of the Kurds' two main party leaders, together with Massoud Barzani.

The two are offering different visions of the future: autonomy through direct negotiations with Baghdad, favored by Mr. Barzani, or a more independent self-rule within Iraq, with any negotiations with Baghdad conducted through the United Nations.

With Iraqi rule loosened when Western coalition forces established a security zone in northern Iraq after the Kurds' failed uprising last spring, about a million Kurds are expected to vote on Sunday, election officials said.

They will vote for one of seven party lists from which a roughly 100-member legislative assembly will be drawn proportionally.

The voters will also choose one of four candidates, including Mr. Barzani and Mr. Talabani, as Kurdish leader, though ultimate power will rest with the assembly, they said.

The prospect that the elections could further weaken Iraq's grip on the region has raised fears that Baghdad, which recently strengthened its forces along the Kurdish front, may try to disrupt the polls through military action or sabotage, Kurdish officials said.

Campaigning has been most intense in this sprawling city of some 800,000 on the southern fringe of the Kurdish-controlled zone, where senior officials in the two main parties say a local victory could spell victory overall.

Both claim to hold majority support in the city, where residents say the parties' stands on future relations with Baghdad is the key issue.

Mr. Barzani, head of the Kurdistan Democratic Party led for years by his father, the late tribal and guerrilla leader Mustafa Barzani, has said he favors reaching an automony agreement with Baghdad because he does not believe any other solution would win the support of neighboring countries or the West.

Mr. Talabani, veteran leader of the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan, has said that Baghdad has lost credibility in past autonomy talks.

He said he favors self-determination for the Kurds within a democratic Iraq that would grant the Kurds more self-rule than simple autonomy, and has said that any future talks should be carried out through the United Nations.

Many residents said they believed the elections, particularly for the assembly, were too close to call. They said Mr. Barzani's party was generally believed to have the widest overall support. But they said many Kurds were also expected to vote for Mr. Talabani's party because they fear that under autonomy, Iraq might use the return of its civil administration, withdrawn from the Kurdish area last fall, to restore its grip on the area.

Kurdish officials are struggling to insure fair elections, with polling places to be supervised by representatives of all seven parties as well as international observers.

After two incidents between supporters of rival parties in the last few weeks erupted in gunfire, leaders of all parties have called on supporters to calm campaign rivalry and have publicly pledged to abide by the results.

RULE OF LAW PROGRAM IN CENTRAL AND EASTERN EUROPE

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues correspondence I had with the Department of State concerning the Rule of Law Program in Central and Eastern Europe. I wrote to the Department of State on February 21, 1992 on this topic, and on May 4, 1992, I received a reply, to which a summary list of U.S. Rule of Law Assistance Programs for Central and Eastern Europe attached. The text of the correspondence follows:

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, February 21, 1992.

The Hon. LAWRENCE EAGLEBURGER,
Deputy Secretary of State, Department of State, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I write with respect to the Rule of Law program in Central and Eastern Europe. The purpose of this letter is to obtain your assessment of the speed, quality, and effectiveness of program implementation, and your plans for a similar program in the former Soviet Union.

First, I would like your overall evaluation of the Rule of Law in Central and Eastern Europe. It is my understanding that USIA has taken the lead on program implementation, under the combined policy oversight direction of USIA and the Human Rights Bureau of the Department of State.

What were the successes and problems in program implementation during FY 1990 and 1991?

What changes do you propose in the management of the FY 1992 Rule of Law program and how will those changes improve the speed, quality and effectiveness of program implementation?

Who will monitor and organize the program in the field?

Second, I would like to know about the role of non-governmental organizations in the Rule of Law program.

What role do you see for NGO's in this program?

How specifically does this program benefit from the participation of a number of agencies and organizations, both inside and outside the U.S. government?

What is your assessment of the work done to date by the American Bar Association, the NGO which has worked on implementation of the Rule of Law program?

Do you foresee a continuing role for the ABA and other non-governmental organizations in the Rule of Law program?

Do you plan to set aside a specific share of Rule of Law funding for proposals and participation by non-governmental organizations?

Finally, I would like to inquire about the SEED model for Rule of Law programs in the former Soviet Union.

Do you seek to replicate the same structures and program in the former Soviet Union?

Is the replication of existing SEED program structures, and participation by the same or similar non-governmental organizations, the quickest and most effective way to begin Rule of Law programs in the former Soviet Union?

How precisely will you monitor and implement a program in the former Soviet Union?

I appreciate your attention to this letter and look forward to your reply.

With best regards,
Sincerely,

LEE H. HAMILTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, DC, May 4, 1992.

The Hon. LEE H. HAMILTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This responds to your February 21 letter to Deputy Secretary Eagleburger inquiring about the Rule of Law program for Central and Eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States. I regret our delay in responding.

You ask first for our overall evaluation of the Rule of Law Program for Central and Eastern Europe. We believe that the program has been extremely successful. I am enclosing by way of background a summary list of programs that have been funded in FY 1991 under the Rule of Law Program. A few of our achievements with the FY 1991 allocation include:

Providing long-term consultants as advisers to aid individuals involved in legal reforms in Hungary, Romania, and Slovakia;

Conducting an intensive week-long judicial seminar in Romania that was so successful that the Romanians requested that it be made an annual tradition;

In limited cases as appropriate, conducting thorough needs assessments to ensure a thoughtful approach to future assistance efforts; and

Providing focused shorter-term consultants to provide advice on particular subjects under consideration by Central and Eastern European governments, such as judicial restructuring, parliamentary oversight of security forces, and civil control of the military.

For FY 1992, we have enhanced the interagency group that oversees the program. In the field, programs will be carried out, as they have in the past, by USIS officers under the direction of the Public Affairs Officer, and, ultimately, the Ambassador.

You also ask about the role of nongovernmental organizations in the rule of law program and particularly about the work of the American Bar Association Central and Eastern European Law Initiative [ABA CEELI]. We believe that the CEELI project has provided valuable services to Central and Eastern European legal reforms in the course of its assistance program funded by the $400,000 grant it received from the National Endowment from Democracy in FY 1990. The Agency for International Development is in the process of making a grant award to the ABA CEELI of nearly $280,000 to carry out assistance activities in the rule of law area in order to permit CEELI to carry on its successful assistance activities, and additional funding for the ABA is contemplated in the future.

We also contemplate that a portion of the FY 1992 Rule of Law funds administered at USIA will also be made available as grants to private organizations prepared to contribute to program goals in the rule of law area. We will also continue, as we have in the past, to encourage coordination and collaboration among a variety of governmental agencies and organizations such as the Department of Justice, the Federal Judicial Center, the Administrative Conference of the United States. These agencies all have a substantial amount of expertise and resources to contribute to the problems faced by Central and Eastern European governments in effecting legal reform.

The allocation of funding under the Rule of Law program is still under discussion, but as a general matter, the amount of funds expended on grants to outside organizations will be determined in large part by the caliber of the grant applications received. In addition, because of the importance of Central and Eastern European legal reforms to the American foreign policy agenda, we believe that when U.S. Government funds are supporting an effort to provide basic assistance to a foreign government related to the shaping of a Constitution or the design and implementation of basic laws establishing a legal system, it is imperative that the U.S. Government be involved on a cooperative basis.

Finally, you ask about program plans for rule of law assistance to the Commonwealth of Independent States. Final decisions have yet to be made on the ultimate size and programming of our assistance activities in this area.

Thus far, $250,000 has been made available to the State Department Bureau of Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs to continue and expand on a series of rule of law programs that it had initiated in the past. We expect that these will include: (1) regular involvement of U.S. judges in continuing education programs of the Legal Academy of the Russian Ministry of Justice (formerly a part of the Soviet Ministry of Justice); (2) a similar judicial cooperation effort with the Ukrainian Government, and, (3) an intensive three— or four-week summer seminar in Washington D.C. for legal system officials from throughout the CIS. In fact, a group of U.S. judges has recently returned from a three-week program at the Russian Legal Academy earlier this month.

In addition, USIA is conducting a number of rule of law activities out of its base program budget. These include work with the Administrative Conference of the United States on a program in Moscow and Kiev to provide information and assistance in the administrative law area. USIA will also be supporting assistance for the Russian Constitutional Court.

Beyond current funding, we contemplate that substantial additional funding will be made available for rule of law activities. We anticipate that both governmental and nongovernmental organizations (such as the ABA CEELI project) will receive considerable resources to expand current efforts.

Policy direction for rule of law assistance to the Commonwealth of Independent States is provided by the Bureau of Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs, as is the case for the Central and Eastern European assistance program. Implementation in Washington and in the field reflects cooperative relations between the State Department and other agencies, including A.I.D., USIA, the Department of Justice, and the Federal Judicial Center. Evaluations will also be done as required by A.I.D. standards.

I hope this information is useful to you. Please feel free to let me know if additional information would be helpful.

Sincerely,

JANET G. MULLINS,
Assistant Secretary, Legislative Affairs.

Based in the Institute on Juridical Sciences of the Romanian Academy, they are working with the Ministry of Justice, the Office of the General Prosecutor, and other officials on various aspects of legal reform.

Judicial/Prosecutorial Seminar

At the request of Romanian officials, a seminar for judges and prosecutors is being planned for Bucharest in summer 1992 as a follow-up to the August 1991 judicial seminar. In connection with the upcoming program, mini-seminars would be conducted at other locations in Romania. Two to three U.S. judges and two U.S. prosecutors would participate. It is hoped that one of these U.S. prosecutors, experienced in forensic investigation, can arrive in Romania several weeks before the seminar and stay several weeks afterwards to provide additional advice to the General Prosecutor's Office.

Magistrate School

Assistance to the newly-formed Romanian magistrate's training school is underway in a number of forms. Both U.S. legal consultants and two ABA legal liaisons are lecturing at the school, and provision of additional resources (including books, faculty, and intangible support) is being contemplated, in conjunction with the ABA CEELI project.

CONGRESSMEN KILDEE PAYS TRIBUTE TO YOUTH IN GOVERNMENT WEEK

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to rise before you today to recognize an effort promoting educational and academic interest among the young people of Pontiac, MI, the "Youth In Government Project". Founded over 3 years ago by two dynamic community leaders, Rev. Douglas Jones and former Mayor Walter Moore, the project continues to make great strides toward achieving educational equity and parity for the citizens of Pontiac.

Each school involved in the project selects 13 students. One of these students will be selected to compete for the position of "Mayor For A Day". The mayor is elected by a panel of judges based on a brief speech prepared by each contestant. The top speaker is selected to be mayor and the runners up fill the positions of city council, president pro tem or serve as head of a department. The program is designed to give each participant a working knowledge of municipal government structure.

Last night, the Pontiac Youth In Government project held a banquet for the students, parents, public officials, and the officers and staff of Welcome Missionary Baptist Church at 7 p.m. at the Main Event, in the Pontiac Silverdome. This banquet culminated the activities for the 3d Annual Youth In Government Week. The 1992 Youth Mayor For A Day addressed the banquet with an award winning speech.

The Pontiac Youth In Government project is dedicated to the full development of our Nation's most valuable resource, our youth. The project represents a continuous partnership between Welcome Missionary Baptist Church, the city of Pontiac and the Pontiac Board of Education. The Pontiac Youth In Government project has demonstrated to the Nation that great achievements may be accomplished when a community works together toward a common goal.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I ask you and my fellow Members of Congress to join me in paying tribute to the Pontiac Youth In Government project. Their unyielding commitment to the development of their city's youth should serve as a model for the entire Nation.

BILL TO PROMOTE SELF-DETERMINATION FOR EAST TIMOR

HON. TONY P. HALL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to promote self-determination for the people of East Timor and to terminate United States assistance to Indonesia. I am pleased that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY], the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. MACHTLEY], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] are joining me as original cosponsors.

On December 7, 1975, Indonesian military forces invaded the former Portuguese colony of East Timor. The territory was made the 27th Province of Indonesia in 1976. The Washington Post termed this action "integration without choice," and observed in an editorial on May 23, 1976: "Timor's absorption has been a depressing example of international double standards."

At least tens of thousands of East Timorese—most experts say between 100,000 and 200,000—out of a population of nearly 700,000, died in the fighting, famine, and disease that followed Indonesia's invasion and occupation of East Timor. Most of these deaths occurred outside of the world's view, with Indonesia effectively closing and controlling all access to the territory. A bloodstained "khaki curtain" was draped over East Timor.

Like the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait in 1990, the Indonesian invasion of East Timor in 1975 was condemned as a violation of international law. The United Nations General Assembly passed Resolution 3485 and a Security Council passed Resolution 384, both of which deployed the Indonesian military intervention in East Timor, called upon the Government of Indonesia to withdraw without delay its armed forces from East Timor, and reiterated the right of the people of East Timor to self-determination. In adopting Resolution 3485, the United Nations General Assembly stated that it: "Calls upon all States to respect the inalienable right of the people of Portuguese Timor to self-determination, freedom and independence and to determine their future political status in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples."

As the Indonesian occupation continued into 1976, the United Nations Security Council passed Resolution 389, which again called for the withdrawal of Indonesian military forces from East Timor and which reaffirmed "the inalienable right of its people to self-determination." This resolution further declared that "all efforts should be made to create conditions that will enable the people of East Timor to exercise freely their right to self-determination."

Despite the revulsion of the world community to the illegal annexation of East Timor by Indonesia, Indonesia continues to occupy East Timor in contravention of international law and global opinion expressed through the United Nations. In the years since the invasion of East Timor, international human rights groups have continued to report widespread and ongoing violations of basic human rights. Visitors from the outside world who have managed to get into Indonesia-occupied East Timor have consistently noted a climate of fear and repression. As an editorial of The Christian Science Monitor of April 28, 1992, summarized it: "For 16 years Indonesia has kept East Timor in a state of perpetual repression. There is no self-government, press, unions, student, or professional groups. The few reporters daring to venture into Timor tell of police stations and torture chambers spread throughout the capital, Dili."

From time-to-time, specific details of Indonesian atrocities have come to world attention, but no such incident had the impact of the massacre of unarmed Timorese at Dili's Santa Cruz cemetery by Indonesian military forces on November 12, 1991. At least 75 to 100 civilians were killed, with many more injured. The precise number of casualties may never be determined.

Other massacres and other atrocities have occurred in East Timor since 1975. But this incident was different: it was videotaped by an outsider who succeeded in smuggling the tape out of the militarized territory. In addition, two American reporters, Allan Nairn and Amy Goodman, were savagely beaten and nearly killed by the Indonesian soldiers who perpetrated the massacre. They survived to become witnesses to the world of the tragedy of East Timor.

The wake of the Santa Cruz massacre in Dili, the House and the Senate each passed resolutions condemning the killings, asking for justice, and urging the monitoring of human rights conditions in East Timor. Throughout the years since the invasion, large numbers of Representatives and Senators have cosigned numerous letters and resolutions about human rights violations in East Timor. In essence, these initiatives have urged the United States and other concerned nations to encourage the Indonesian Government to stop the killing in East Timor, respect basic human rights, and allow increased access to East Timor by international human rights groups and journalists.

Until today, these congressional efforts have not directly addressed the question of self-determination for the people of East Timor. However, the convergence of the November massacre and current international realities have sparked congressional interest in the issue of self-determination.

With the ending of the cold war, the revitalization of the United Nations, and the international trend to recognize long-postponed nationalistic aspirations, the question of self-determination for East Timor can now be put upon the table. At the core of the human rights violations in East Timor is a fundamental injustice: The Timorese have never been granted the chance to determine their own future.

It is insufficient to beg the Indonesians repeatedly to treat the Timorese with basic human decency. This is like condoning slavery, but asking the slave driver to spare the whip. Attention instead must be focused on getting the Indonesians to withdraw from East Timor and to allow the Timorese to participate in a referendum on self-determination.

Unfortunately, the Indonesians have not responded positively to appeals to allow the people of East Timor to vote on their own status. The Government of Indonesia has claimed that the question of self-determination was settled in 1976. The position of the United States has been to recognize the de facto incorporation of East Timor into Indonesia, without acknowledging that a valid act of self-determination occurred.

Since human rights violations by Indonesian forces in East Timor continue, and since Indonesia has failed to respect the United Nations declarations calling for the withdrawal of its troops from East Timor and self-determination for the Timorese, greater international pressure must be brought to bear on Indonesia. Following the November massacre, Canada and Denmark suspended aid to Indonesia, and the Netherlands recently severed its aid to Indonesia, including its chairing of the Inter-Governmental Group on Indonesia.

When Iraq invaded Kuwait, the United States spearheaded the international effort to impose sanctions against the Saddam Hussein government. It was clear there could no longer be "business as usual" with a government acting in blatant violation of international law. Similarly, there should be no "business as usual" with Indonesia as long as it perpetuates its illegal annexation of East Timor. Outdated cold war geopolitical considerations have no place in a new world order based upon respect for international law and the rights of peoples to determine their own destinies.

The bill my colleagues and I are introducing today terminates United States bilateral assistance to Indonesia upon the date of enactment. It further suspends generalized system of preference benefits for Indonesian products and requires the Secretary of the Treasury to instruct the United States representative at the World Bank to oppose any loan or other utilization of Bank funds for Indonesia.

Estimated fiscal year 1992 military and economic aid for Indonesia is about $58 million. In addition, commercial arms deliveries under the Arms Export Control Act are expected to total $42.9 million in fiscal 1992, and foreign military sales agreements should add another $10 million.

Under the generalized system of preferences [GSP], the President can extend duty-free treatment to some or all of the exports of a developing nation. In 1990, total United States imports of GSP products from Indonesia totaled about $562 million, of which about $216 million was in the form of GSP free imports and $346 million was in the form of GSP dutiable imports. The 1991 United States trade deficit with Indonesia was $1.3 billion, with United States imports from Indonesia of $3.2 billion and United States export to Indonesia of $1.9 billion.

Up until this year, Indonesia has received considerable financial assistance from governments and international organizations that have participated in the Inter-Governmental Group on Indonesia [IGGI], whose members have included: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Spain, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, and the United States. Multilateral representation has included: the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the Asian Development Bank, and the U.N. Development Program. At the June 1991 meeting of the IGGI, Indonesia's international donor community pledged a total of $4.75 billion, made up of $1.89 billion in bilateral aid and $2.86 billion in multilateral aid. The IGGI mechanism essentially was dissolved with the discontinuation of aid to Indonesia from the Netherlands. A World Bank effort is underway to create the Consultative Group on Indonesia [CGI] to replace the IGGI. World Bank loans approved in fiscal year 1991 for Indonesia totaled $1.6 billion.

The termination of bilateral aid, the suspension of multilateral assistance, and the denial of trade preferences would remain in effect until the President certifies to Congress that: (1) Indonesia is permitting immediate and unrestricted access to East Timor for international human rights organizations and international organizations; (2) international human rights organizations report that Indonesian Government forces or other military or paramilitary forces under the control of the Government of Indonesia have ended all forms of inhumane treatment, including torture; (3) Indonesia is in compliance with United Nations General Assembly Resolution 3485 and United Nations Security Council Resolutions 384 and 389; and (4) Indonesia allows a United Nations supervised referendum on self-determination for the people of East Timor.

This is strong legislation, but a strong response is long overdue to Indonesia's aggression, repression, and terror in East Timor. At a time when every U.S. foreign aid dollar is undergoing rigorous scrutiny, why should the taxpayers provide aid to a nation which has seized and subjugated its neighbor? The Congress can both save money and stand for principle in terminating aid to Indonesia.

I would urge my colleagues to join with me in cosponsoring this bill, the full text of which follows:

H.R. 5176

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) In violation of international law, Indonesia invaded East Timor in December 1975, and forcefully annexed the territory in July 1976.

(2) Indonesian sovereignty over East Timor has never been recognized by the United Nations.

(3) The United Nations General Assembly adopted Resolution 3485 in 1975 and the United Nations Security Council adopted Resolution 384 in 1975 and Resolution 389 in 1976, each of which called upon the government of Indonesia to withdraw without delay its armed forces from East Timor and which reiterated the right of the people of East Timor to self-determination in accordance with General Assembly Resolution 1514(XV).

(4) United Nations General Assembly Resolution 37/30 of November 1982 requested the Secretary-General to initiate consultations with all parties directly involved in the situation in East Timor in order to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the issue.

(6) Throughout the years of Indonesia's occupation of East Timor, international human rights organizations have reported evidence of human rights violations, including killings, torture, arbitrary arrest, and repression of freedom of expression.

(7) Indonesia's forceful suppression of basic human rights in East Timor was brought to world attention on November 12, 1991, when Indonesian military forces opened fire on unarmed Timorese civilians in Dili, killing 75 to 100 people and injuring many more.

(8) International human rights organizations report intense repression in East Timor in the period since the massacre of November 12, 1991.

(9) In section 359 of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1992 and 1993, the Congress called for an end to all forms of human rights violations in East Timor and for an internationally acceptable solution which addresses the underlying causes of the conflict in East Timor.

(10) Indonesian military forces remain in East Timor in contravention of resolutions adopted by the United Nations General Assembly and Security Council, and the Government of Indonesia has failed to initiate an internationally recognized process for self-determination for East Timor.

SEC. 2. TERMINATION OF FOREIGN ASSISTANCE FOR INDONESIA.

THE VIOLENCE IN KARABAKH MUST END

HON. DICK SWETT

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. SWETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in solidarity with the Armenian people, and especially those brave Armenians besieged in the struggling region of Karabakh. I am filled with sorrow to think of the violence being directed at these innocent people, and the suffering they are enduring.

Today, these victims of aggression are, in many cases, without electricity, food, fuel, and water, even medical supplies are in dangerously short supply.

Over 180,000 people are suffering right now from these and other consequences of the anarchy and violence raging in Karabakh. In the meantime, the world's only superpower stands by and watches.

Where is this New World Order? Is Karabakh destined to be forgotten? Where is our foreign policy President? And finally, where are we? Are we ready to commit ourselves to end this ongoing atrocity? Are we ready to end the nightmare of women and children trapped by the constant shelling?

The United States need not sit on the sidelines and watch the horror unfold. We can and will make a difference. I know that my colleagues do not feel powerless. Together we can ensure that President Bush can garner an international commitment to end this horror.

Mr. Speaker, we are not naive. We all know that the divisions in Karabakh will take time to resolve themselves, just as our own internal divisions will take time to resolve themselves. But, as the proverb says, "the journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step."

That first step is the immediate cessation of violence. This is our bottom line. We call on Azerbaijan to immediately cease shelling Karabakh and to lift the blockade without delay. We also call for U.N. peacekeepers to be sent to Karabakh to prevent further violence.

Violence sometimes seems an easy path to take when faced with intractable issues. But it is the wrong path. The road to peace can be a harder path to tread, but its rewards are many, and they will withstand the test of time.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in working to live up to the challenge of paving the way for peace and stability in this region.

May God bless the Armenian nation.

REGULATORY REFORM NEEDED TO HELP SMALL BUSINESSES

HON. THOMAS W. EWING

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. EWING. Mr. Speaker, this morning Representative RIGGS offered an amendment to the Small Business Credit Crunch Relief Act stating that the Congress supports the President's moratorium on regulations. Had that amendment not been ruled nongermane by the chairman, I would have been in strong support.

There are few issues which are more important to American businesses and to the strength of our economy than Federal overregulation, which is driving small business persons out of business and crippling economic expansion. Stopping the avalanche of Federal mandates must be a top priority for Congress and the President.

I have been a strong supporter of the President's 90-day moratorium on regulations and his work on regulatory reform. I have introduced a separate resolution calling on him to extend the moratorium for a full year. Eighty-five of my colleagues from both sides of the aisle have cosponsored that resolution, and I encourage each of them to support the amendment before us. While we would have liked to see the President extend the moratorium for a year, we are pleased that he has extended it through August.

Since this week is Small Business Week, I think it is important that we draw attention to issues facing small businesses, and a top concern is excessive Federal regulation. Because they have fewer resources to spend, small business bears the heaviest burden of Federal mandates. Small business closings and bankruptcies are up sharply in the last few years, and Federal regulation is partly to blame.

Too often the Federal Government does not consider the impact of Federal regulations on small businesses. In fact, many Federal regulations have little or no clear benefit, yet cost businesses millions or billions of dollars in compliance costs. And those costs are passed on to consumers.

Not only do Federal agencies fail to adequately consider the impact of their rules on small businesses, but sometimes it seems that these bureaucrats don't care about the fact that their mandates are driving businesses into the ground and therefore destroying jobs. In 1980, the Regulatory Flexibility Act [RFA] was passed to require agencies to analyze the impact of regulations on small businesses and offer alternative solutions to costly mandates. The House Republican Research Committee Task Force on Small Business recently held a hearing on the implementation of the RFA. It as exceedingly clear at that hearing that Federal regulators have circumvented or simply ignored important provisions of the RFA and the efforts of the Small Business Administration to implement the RFA.

If the Regulatory Flexibility Act were properly implemented and appropriately strengthened we would go a long way toward easing the regulatory burdens on small businesses. This should be a priority matter for Congress. However, it is also important that regulatory agencies begin to respect the spirit of the RFA.

The level of Federal regulation has increased dramatically in recent years. The pages in the Federal Register numbered over 67,000 last year, an increase of 26 percent over 1990. The Federal Government employs over 122,000 Federal regulators in over 50 different agencies. These bureaucrats are working on nearly 5,000 new regulations. This regulating machine costs taxpayers about $11 billion per year.

The National Chamber Foundation recently released a report which estimates the economic cost at about $400 billion every year. This translates to a cost of over $4,000 for every American household.

These costs, while they don't show up in the Federal budget, are a tremendous drain on our economy. Dollars spent to meet Federal mandates are dollars not spent on new plants or equipment. They are dollars not spent on creating new capital or creating new jobs. Because the cost of regulations are passed on to consumers by way of higher prices, Federal regulation means that each American has less disposable income.

One of the most frustrating things for small businesses is the required paperwork. At least 5 billion man-hours are expended every year in meeting the Federal paperwork burden. Time spent filling out forms is time not spent creating a product or providing a service. I know there are many small businesses which have hired people just to do the paperwork mandated by the Government.

The President's moratorium has helped get our economy moving again and I commend him for his actions. Dozens of new regulations have been put on hold, and it has been estimated that the moratorium has saved the economy as much as $20 billion so far. I applaud the President's extension for the moratorium through August.

We must scale back the level of Federal regulation and reform the regulatory process. Our goal must be to make the regulatory process responsible and fair to those who are required to meet Federal mandates. We must look at how regulations will affect businesses and take that into account. Our Federal regulators should work with small businesses, instead of working against them, to find ways to achieve the goals of regulations without crippling business. I believe that small businesses want to work with agencies to achieve mutually acceptable rules.

Federal regulations stifle small business entrepreneurship, drain scarce resources, crippled productivity, and inhibit economic expansion and job creation.

I would have strongly supported the amendment offered by Mr. RIGGS if it had not been ruled to be nongermane. I commend Mr. RIGGS for his efforts.

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, the timeworn cliche instructs us to take time to "smell the roses." For Members of Congress, wrapped up as we are in our unbelievably hectic schedules at home and in Washington, it is easy for us to overlook some of the small but special details which round out our lives.

Sadly, in the crazy pace of Congress, we often sacrifice the time we spend with, and the attention we pay to, our families. And the people who need us the most, our children and our grandchildren, sometimes receive the shortest shrift of all.

For this reason, I was delighted to come across a wonderful poem that was written by Chelsea Lantos-Swett, a third-grader, who is the daughter of DICK SWETT, and granddaughter of TOM LANTOS. Our colleagues have a great deal to be proud of in Chelsea, who is clearly destined for literary greatness. I hope the Members of this House will enjoy Chelsea's work as much as I did, and I hope her poem inspires all of us to contemplate the achievements of those who are dear to us.

MOTHER EARTH'S TURN

(By Chelsea Lantos-Swett)

Swirling snow, most unexpected,
Winter's over, March is here.
Mother Earth is now corrected?
Now we get our frozen tear?

Snow that winter could not bring,
How it spirals down so fast.
What happened to the fresh new Spring?
Are we frozen in the past?

Caught in blasts of icy sleet,
Captured in a blank white world,
Walking on a frozen street
Watching little leaves go curl.

Oh how I wish to have a flower,
Have one bluebird passing by,
Spot spring from her daisy tower

THE RIOTS IN L.A.: A RESPONSE

HON. LINDSAY THOMAS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. THOMAS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, there is much despair and anger in the wake of the racial violence that has shaken the Nation in recent days. But as we stir the cooling ashes of Los Angeles and other cities, we can find the early glimmer of hope that something good may yet come from this tragedy.

We have seen Americans of all colors—black, white, and brown—rally to peacefully express their commitment against racism. I sense a determination in the hearts of good men and women everywhere to take a stand, and chart a new course.

Also, in the pulpits of America, our ministers have raised their voices to give guidance to people of faith.

One of those voices recently was the Rev. Michael Bledsoe of the Riverside Baptist Church in Washington. This is a biracial church whose parishioners come from throughout the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I insert Pastor Bledsoe's remarks delivered on May 3, 1992, in the RECORD at this point:

THE RIOTS IN L.A.: A RESPONSE

(By Pastor Michael Bledsoe)

One year ago, our President, our congress and our military led our nation into the desert sands of Saudi Arabia. The declared goal was the freeing of the Kuwaiti people from the tyranny of the Iraqi dictator, Saddam Hussein. Now, one year later, our President has sent troops into Los Angeles, not for the liberation of a people, but for the shoring up and defense of the status quo.

The events of this past week are heart rending and even maddening. Surely we can concur with the President that the brutal murder of people and the wanton destruction of property should end. But the Church of Jesus Christ pleads for something more: we ask that the same energy, commitment and resources pledged to a war far from our shores be expended upon the emancipation of our own people within our own cities. I am, like many clergy, confounded by our nation's seeming ability to create Marshall Plans for other nations, but when it comes to the economic and social well-being of minorities in our own country, somehow the energy dissipates. Like you, I am appalled by the murder of people who were innocent and simply in the wrong place at the wrong time. But I am equally appalled by a continued neglect of our inner cities and the racism which fuels much of that neglect.

Twenty-six years ago, the National Committee of Negro Churchmen, issued a statement on "Black Power." That statement noted something our President and Congress are apparently unable to grasp: "powerlessness breeds a race of beggars. We are faced now with a situation where conscienceless power meet powerless conscience, threatening the very foundation of our nation." That statement is, unfortunately, as accurate today as it was on July 31, 1966.

All of us know that the travesty of the inane verdicts handed down in the Rodney King beating case was and is simply the fuse. We are faced not only with the travesty of this particular case, but with racist injustice which continues to trap and enslave men, women and children. Yes, violence is wrong and it begets violence, but we as the Church must plead with our leaders to understand that you cannot, lest you be a hypocrit, denounce violence by the powerless while at the same time withholding condemnation of that violence which denies a people their past and a future.

We have our work and mission set out before us. Our particular church, Riverside Baptist Church, must reawaken to its historic purpose and mission, that we proclaim the Gospel of Christ knowing but one law, the love of God and the love of humanity. Were it not for such a Gospel, were it not for the power of Christ to break asunder the inhuman chains of racism and violence, we would be despairing indeed. But alas, we do have a hope greater than that which would crush us. Together let us in these coming days speak with courage, live in compassion and work passionately for justice. For Martin Luther King, Jr. has warned us "Either we will live together as brothers and sisters or we will perish together as fools."

DESPERATE PLIGHT OF THE ETHNIC ALBANIANS IN KOSOVA AND OTHER AREAS OF THE FORMER YUGOSLAV FEDERATION

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, Slobodan Milosevic, the last Communist dictator in Europe, continues to shock and horrify the civilized world as he directs his wanton campaign against the successor states of Yugoslavia.

Milosevic's wrath has caused incalculable human suffering. The Communist Serbian effort to dominate the freedom-seeking Republics of Croatia, Slovenia, Bosnia-Herzegovia, Macedonia, and Kosova will continue until we in the United States take steadfast and decisive steps to stamp it out.

The violent means through which Serbian Communists seek to dominate the region were on display for all to see 12 years ago when, after the death of Tito, they opened a campaign of terror against the Albanians in the autonomous Republic of Kosova.

The efforts to isolate and vilify Albanians in Kosova were as revolting as they were comprehensive. The Communists in Belgrade purged the Kosovar Communists, closed the parliament in Kosova and persecuted its freely and fairly elected members, placed restrictions on the use of Albanian language and symbols, and ultimately imposed martial law on Kosova.

The dire situation in the former Yugoslavia requires that uncompromising attention be paid to the plight of Albanians in Kosova. As an historic whipping boy to the Communist Serbians, the ethnic Albanian population in Kosova is particularly vulnerable in these volatile times.

Dr. Ivo Banac, a professor of history and master of Pierson College at Yale University, has written an excellent paper on the serious plight of Albanians in Kosova, entitled, "Position Paper on the Question of Kosova and the Status of Albanians in the Successor States of Yugoslavia."

Dr. Banac's work highlights the importance of Congress' vigilance with respect to the situation in the former Yugoslavia. There is a clear need for aggressive action against the Serbian Communists who continue their brutal and deadly assault against the citizens of the freedom-seeking republics of the disintegrated Yugoslavia. I ask that his paper be placed in today's RECORD and I urge my colleagues to give it the thoughtful attention it deserves.

POSITION PAPER ON THE QUESTION OF KOSOVA AND THE STATUS OF ALBANIANS IN THE SUCCESSOR STATES OF YUGOSLAVIA

The Autonomous Province of Kosova (Kosovo in Serbia), a federal unit in disintegrating Yugoslavia, has been an Albanian majority area for several centuries. According to the official Yugoslav censuses, which were always biased against minority nationalities, Albanians constituted 65.7 percent of Kosova's population in 1921 and 77.4 percent in 1981. In fact, they now constitute as much as 90 percent of Kosova's population. In addition, Albanians constitute a fifth of the population of Macedonia, and are an absolute majority in western Macedonia. They also have significant enclaves in eastern Montenegro (Ulqin/Ulcinj, Plavë/Plav, Tivar/Bar, Titograd) and southern Serbia (Bujanovac, Presevo).

The large concentrations of Albanians in former Yugoslavia are a result of an unjust settlement of the Balkan wars of 1912–1913. The powers that arbitrated the disposition of these territories, which were ruled by the Ottoman Empire from the fourteenth century, were guided more by expediency than by the wishes of the local people. They favored Serbia and Montenegro over the weak and newly independent Albanian state. The situation did not change with the establishment of Yugoslavia (1918), in which Serbia dominated and pursued a policy of denationalization and expulsion of Albanians, nor with the Communist revolution in Yugoslavia (1941–1945), which brought Albanians still more repression.

The Communist regime of Marshal Tito, however, from the beginning recognized the autonomy of Kosova within the Serbian republic. This was originally no more than a token measure that could hardly obscure the subordinate position of Albanians in Yugoslavia. In 1974, as Tito increasingly reacted against his rivals in Serbian Communist establishment, he promulgated a new constitution that granted considerable self-rule to the six Yugoslav republics, but also to the two autonomous provinces—Kosovo and Vojvodina, whose status was enhanced to virtually the level of a federal republic. Henceforth, Kosovar Albanians participated in power-sharing. They increasingly were represented in various federal agencies from which they were hitherto excluded. One of their representatives—Sinan Hasani—even served as the President of Yugoslavia in 1986.

The position of Albanians started deteriorating after Tito's death in 1980. Serbian Communists opened a campaign against the autonomy of Kosova and systematically inflamed Serbian public opinion against the alleged Albanian "irredentism." The Belgrade authorities vilified the Albanians and portrayed them as extremists who were predisposed to mayhem. In the process, the Serbian Communist leadership purged the majority of Kosovar Communists, started placing restrictions on the use of Albanian language and symbols, and ultimately imposed martial law on Kosova. The worst excesses took place after 1987, when Slobodan Milosevic, the most extreme among Serbia's Communist leaders, became the head of Serbia's Communist Party.

Under Milosevic, Albanians have been subjected to terror and threat of extinction. He closed their schools, fired their professionals, banned their press and institutions, imposed the arbitrary rule by members of a tiny and privileged Serbian minority, and carried out a series of electoral farces that have been boycotted by Albanians. It is not an exaggeration to say that apartheid, though moribund in South Africa, is alive and well in Kosova. Nowhere else in former Yugoslavia—nowhere else in Eastern Europe—are human and national rights abused with such ferocity as in Milosevic-ruled Kosova. In 1989, after subverting the provisions of the constitution. Milosevic forced changes in the constitution of Serbia and Yugoslavia, abolished the autonomy of Kosova and Vojvodina, and proceeded to govern Kosova by fiat. After the Kosovar assembly held out against Milosevic's misrule, he arbitrarily dismissed it. He has systematically ignored and thwarted all popular measures by Kosovar Albanians to reassert their self-rule. In fact, the legally-constituted assembly of Kosova still functions, though underground. It claims the allegiance of most Kosovars.

Milosevic's arbitrary rule in Kosova was the direct source of the subsequent dissolution of Yugoslavia. Other federal units, notably Slovenia and Croatia, saw the terror against Kosova as the Milosevic model for the whole of Yugoslavia. It would therefore be doubly unjust should the emancipation of Croatia, Slovenia and the other ex-Yugoslav republics leave Kosova under Milosevic's martial law. This means that the United States should support not only the independence of Slovenia, Croatia, Bosnia-Hercegovina, and Macedonia, but also the independence of Kosova. The United States should not only support the restoration of human legal rights of Kosova, but promote an internationally-supervised referendum on the status of Kosova. Let the Kosovars decide by themselves on their future course.

The Albanians of Kosova seek no revenge and are willing to guarantee the individual and group rights of the Serbian minority. Moreover, there should be legal guarantees of access to any Serbian monastery or other such . . . (indecipherable) . . . yearn for the freedom of travel, mutual access, and unity—which were denied to them since 1913. For the moment, however, the relations between Kosova and Albania can best be accomplished by promoting European-wide integrations. Nevertheless, in order to alleviate Serbian fears on this score, the Albanians of Kosova should be willing to entertain no arrangements with Albania without the agreement of Kosova's Serbian community. This can be the most important Albanian contribution to the restoration of democracy in Serbia, which, together with Montenegro, remains the last Communist-governed country in Europe.

The failure of the Bush-Baker foreign policy is especially evident in the case of Kosova. Most of the administration's efforts during the last three years consisted of feeble protests about the violation of human rights in Kosova. In fact, despite an occasional expression of displeasure, the administration's principal worry was not to offend Milosevic. Unfortunately, the policy of appeasement was no more successful in the case of Milosevic than in the case of any other despot. Moreover, had Milosevic been stopped in Kosova in 1987, Slovenia, Croatia, and now Bosnia-Hercegovina, would have been spared the holocaust of war and destruction. In this case, too, the essence of the Bush-Baker foreign policy is the maintenance of status quo.

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the Harry H. Cohen Post No. 703 of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States of America under the leadership of Cmdr. Ruth Sondak. This post, recognized both at the State and national level for its community service, is located in my congressional district. Whenever I have visited the post I have come away impressed by the dedication and energy of its members. This post has been recognized by the State of Florida for its hospital support program and by the national Jewish War Veterans organizations for their support of the Boy Scouts.

This past Passover the members of the Harry H. Cohen Post collected and distributed food for the less fortunate. The details of that activity are recounted by post members as follows:

The Harry H. Cohen Post #723 of the Jewish War Veterans of USA delivered Passover Baskets to the needy of Dade County, Florida, on Sunday, April 12th. The Jewish War Veterans of USA has 43 posts in Florida and over 300 nationwide, each of which has its own special facet of activities that are community related.

Ruth Sondak, Commander of Post #723, organized and coordinated the program in which several community groups participated with the Post. The Post members began collecting money in February setting a goal of 36 baskets, each to contain chicken, eggs, gifilte fish with horse-radish, borscht, fresh fruit and vegetables, grape juice, matzos, etc., enough food for a family of four for two Seders with enough left over for the rest of the week. The food was purchased from local merchants. Cmdr. Sondak contacted Dir. Gail Weisberg, Community Council of Jewish Elderly, and Remee Bomzer, Jewish Family Services, for names of the recipients, among whom were 18 Russian emigres in the U.S. less than four months. All were families with children, several were veterans families. Individuals on last year's list were put on the Nutrition Program of the Federation and received lesser baskets from them. On Sunday, April 12th, the day of delivery, 5 members of the Shomrim Society of South Florida (Shomrim means Guardian), policemen and firemen arrived at the Surfside Community Center to work with Post members preparing the baskets. The policemen: Ken Goodman, Frances Miller, Herb Schoenfeld, David Waksman and his daughter, Danielle, and Sam Rothstein, and Post members: Max Akst, Norton Banner, Abe Garfinkel.

Leo Goldstein, Ben Levine, Murry Ollin, laughed and joked as they worked together. Then the policemen in groups of two began delivering the baskets to Homestead, to South Beach, to North Shore, to North Miami Beach. Each time they returned for another "load" they wore broad smiles because of the happy responses of the recipients.

Cmdr. Sondak thanked all who participated in this program: "It gave us all a good feeling of accomplishment for a deed well done, knowing that we contributed something to those less fortunate than we, and knowing that they would enjoy this holiday of renewal, redemption and freedom with us.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the members of the Harry H. Cohen Post No. 703 of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States of America and their commander Ruth Sondak. I wish them many more years of such community service.

INDIAN GAMING AND THE STATES

HON. ENI F.H. FALEOMAVAEGA

OF AMERICAN SAMOA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, through Public Law 102–188 (S.J. Res 217, H.J. Res. 342), Congress and the President designated 1992 as the Year of the American Indian. This law pays tribute to the people who first inhabited the land now known as the continental United States. Although only symbolic, this gesture is important because it shows there is sympathy in the eyes of a majority of both Houses of the Congress for those Indian issues which we as a Congress have been struggling with for over 200 years. In support of the Year of the American Indian, and as part of my on-going series this year, I am providing for the consideration of my colleagues an article entitled "The Real Truth About Indian Gaming and the States" in the March 1992 edition of State Legislatures. The article describes Federal law with regard to Indian gaming and summarizes Connecticut's experience.

THE REAL TRUTH ABOUT INDIAN GAMING AND THE STATES

(By Henry C. Cashen and John C. Dill)

Will large-scale Indian-run gambling casinos soon dot the landscape of dozens of states?

Construction of a full-blown casino by the Pequot Indians in Connecticut has raised that very possibility.

Most reports have described the issue in simplistic terms: If a state allows gambling activity in any form, then an Indian tribe within the boundaries of that state must be allowed to conduct a commercialized version of that game.

This view does not accurately reflect the federal law. A careful analysis of the 1988 Indian Gaming Regulatory Act shows that the Connecticut situation need not be replicated in other states, provided they do not make the same mistake that Connecticut made in dealing with the Pequots.

Indians have a long tradition of gambling among themselves, but the use of reservation lands for large-scale commercial gaming designed to attract non-Indian players is a relatively new phenomenon. In 1979, the Seminole tribe of Florida started a highstakes bingo game on their land. Florida challenged this activity in the lower federal courts and lost. In ruling for the tribe, the courts used what has come to be known as the "criminal-prohibitory/civil-regulatory" test. In brief, the test holds that if state law criminally prohibits a form of gambling, then the tribes within the state may not engage in that activity. If, on the other hand, state law civilly regulates a form of gambling, then the tribes within the state may engage in that gaming free of any state control. Florida, like most states, allows bingo for some charitable purposes, and therefore, under this judicial test, the Seminole high-stakes bingo game was given a green light.

Under this theory and its subsequent reaffirmation in other courts, Indian bingo exploded in the 1980s. A recent Los Angeles Times article estimated gross revenues from tribal games growing from $255 million in 1987 to $1 billion in 1991, involving 150 of the nation's 278 reservations.

Such unfettered activity within the boundaries of the states quickly raised tension levels between the tribes and a number of state law enforcement officials. Most states feared that the growth of such "regulation-free" enclaves within their borders would act as a magnet for crime and corruption.

Control of gambling has traditionally been vested with the states. While some may argue that a uniform federal law providing for one set of gaming regulations would be an improvement over 50 different gaming laws, few observers—other than the tribes and their promoters that stood to benefit from the games—supported the further "Balkanization of gaming regulations.

Moreover, the bingo games conducted on Indian lands were aimed almost exclusively at attracting the non-Indian residents of the state. The decision by any state to approve high-stakes gaming for their citizens is highly controversial, and if approved, the games are usually strictly regulated. Suddenly, many jurisdictions that never anticipated or wanted high-stakes bingo gaming within their borders found themselves face to face with this reality. States questioned why one set of rules should apply to citizens standing on state property, but the rules were ignored if those same citizens stepped over the line onto "Indian lands."

At the same time, many tribes and their congressional supporters were also expressing concern about the conduct of these games. In some cases, the non-Indian "promoters" actually running the games were skimming off huge sums of money, leaving the tribes with little or no profits. There were also some documented incidents of corruption and bribery infecting the games.

In 1985, the first congressional hearing on this issue was conducted by the U.S. House Interior Committee, chaired by Congressman Mo Udall of Arizona. At that time, Chairman Udall recommended the establishment of a "national commission" to control and regulate gaming on Indian lands. A similar approach was also suggested by Arizona Senator Dennis DeConcini.

The concept of such a national commission did not address the fundamental tension between the states and the tribes. If adopted, it would have allowed the unchecked expansion of gaming into more exotic forms such as horse and dog racing, casino gambling and slot machines, all of which would have been, in theory, regulated by one federal entity located in Washington. This initial "solution" to the problem of unrestricted gaming on Indian lands served as a wake-up call for the states and organized gaming interests.

For the next three years, the battle over regulation of gaming on Indian lands raged behind the scenes in Congress. Like most hard-fought battles, it was about power, control, compromise and, yes, economics. In early 1987, the issue of Indian gaming finally reached the Supreme Court when it took up the California vs. Cabazon bingo case and decided in favor of the tribe. In reaffirming the "criminal-prohibitory/civil-regulatory" test, the court nevertheless indicated that if Congress chose to limit the rights of the tribes, it could do so by legislative means. In 1988, Congress did precisely that, passing the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act of 1988 (IGRA), which was signed into law by President Reagan.

Like most compromises, IGRA has something for everyone to hate. Indian sovereignty is limited in the context of gambling; states don't have carte blanche authority to control gaming on Indian lands within their borders; and the organized gaming interests have agreed to look to the states to protect them from unfair competition from tribal games.

The law sets up three categories of Indian games. Class I games include low-level games played only by tribal members, i.e., true "Indian gambling." Appropriately, those games remain solely within the control of the tribe. The other two categories address the real public policy issue of gambling on Indian lands by non-Indians. Class II games include bingo, certain card games and video displays of those games. Class II games are controlled by both the tribe and the newly formed federal Indian Gaming Commission. Class III games constitute everything else—pari-mutuel horse and dog racing, jai-alai, casinos and slot machines. Tribes are not allowed to engage in such gaming without an agreement with the state.

In the case of both Class II and Class III games, the now familiar "criminal-prohibitory/civil-regulatory" test is the starting point to determine what games, if any, may occur on Indian lands. Since most states continue to allow bingo for some purpose, Indian-run high stakes bingo games have been allowed to grow and flourish without state control under IGRA. This consequence was intended by the congressional framers of the act since Indian bingo games had already proliferated and it was viewed as politically impossible to close down such operations.

Most of the controversy surrounding IGRA centered on so-called Class III gaming—the complicated games of pari-mutuel wagering, casinos and slots—the very issues that Connecticut grappled with in its discussions with the Pequot tribe. For these games, Congress set up a system of negotiations between the states and the tribes. Unless the negotiations concluded successfully and were adopted in the form of a tribal-state "compact," the tribe was prohibited from engaging in such activity. This prohibition protected states from a unilateral decision by a tribe to begin sophisticated gaming within the state's borders.

At the same time, Congress was also concerned about the states simply stonewalling the Indians. To balance these two competing interests, Congress constructed a complicated framework of time limits and tests to determine if the states are negotiating in "good faith." Contrary to reports surrounding the Connecticut-Pequot negotiations, Congress neither mandated nor assumed that all such negotiations would lead to a tribal-state compact, but Congress did insist that a "good faith" effort be made to reach such a settlement. It appears that Connecticut did not carefully analyze its rights and responsibilities under the law in dealing with the Pequot tribe.

Only those who participated in the discussion between Connecticut and the Pequots know all the twists and turns of those ill-fated negotiations. Nevertheless, it is clear from published reports that Connecticut made several major mistakes. First, when approached by the Pequots, the state refused to sit down and discuss with the tribe their interest in starting a commercial casino, which was based on the existence of limited, low-stakes "Las Vegas Night" gaming laws in the state. These laws met the "criminal-prohibitory/civil-regulatory" test, and the state therefore had the legal responsibility to negotiate with the tribe, which it apparently ignored. After waiting the legislatively mandated six-month period, the tribe went to federal court, and using provisions of IGRA, obtained a court order forcing the state to the table.

Second, it appears that the state failed to fully analyze its rights under IGRA. The law is less than perfect, but it does allow the states to raise a number of issues including the application of state or tribal laws directly related to gaming, operating and licensing standards, and other subjects relevant to gaming in general. The accompanying legislative history makes it clear that "licensing standard" could include agreements on hours of operation, wager and pot limits, types of wagering and the size of the facility. The law also makes it clear that the states can raise such issues as public interest and public safety, the adverse effect on other gaming enterprises and criminality issues.

Because Connecticut refused to negotiate when first approached by the tribe, the court-mandated negotiations were legislatively fast-tracked to conclude within 60 days. IGRA provides that if no agreement is reached within that period, the issue is sent to a court-appointed mediator who considers the "last best offers" from both the tribe and the state. The mediator's choice is then submitted to the state for approval. If the state rejects that choice, the secretary of the interior is asked to prescribe procedures to allow the tribe to engage in Class III gaming.

These provisions were written into IGRA in the hope, of course, that they would never be used. Careful reading of the law should convince any state that it would be in its best interests to avoid handing over the decision to a mediator or the secretary of interior. At the least, if no agreement can be reached, it is assumed that a state will produce a "last best offer" that represents its strongest position for review by the mediator, the secretary and the courts.

Only those Connecticut state negotiators present at the table know precisely what was said or done during those 60 days, but the public record is clear on several subsequent developments. The state and the tribe did not reach an agreement within the allotted time. Most mysteriously, the "last best offer" from Connecticut acquiesced to full-blown high-stakes casino gaming, instead of taking the position that any gaming enterprise conducted on Indian lands be in line with the more modest "Las Vegas Night" state statute. Finally, after the mediator chose the state proposal, the state then rejected its own scheme, thus sending the decision to the secretary of the interior.

In short, it appears Connecticut has no one to blame but itself for its current casino problem. The subsequent efforts of newly elected Governor Lowell Weicker and others to solve it by repealing the state's "Las Vegas Night" statute were rejected by the legislature. On May 31, 1991, Secretary of Interior Lujan approved the state's own plan with minor modifications, and construction is now under way on the Pequot casino.

The spread of high-stakes gaming on Indian lands may well occur in other states, but it is not inevitable. States can approach negotiations with their tribes in a different manner, and insist that the debate more carefully balance the rights of all parties. At the same time, the 1988 Indian Gaming Regulatory Act could be amended to take some of the uncertainties out of the negotiating process between tribes and states. When IGRA was debated, the organized gaming interests argued without success that some legislative limitations be written into the act to avoid low-stakes, state-sanctioned gaming ever being used as an excuse to bootstrap creation of high-stakes Indian gambling enclaves. Such a position was derided as unnecessary and "discriminatory" by the Indians and their congressional supporters.

Perhaps the Connecticut experience will send some of those individuals back to the drawing boards to ensure a more level playing field for all interests.

DEMOCRATIC ELECTIONS IN KURDISTAN

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, this Sunday, May 17, the Kurdish minority of northern Iraq will be holding elections to choose a national legislative assembly. This is an important event for the population of Kurdistan and the entire international community.

The Kurds of Iraq have suffered immensely as a result of the Bush administration's failed Iraq policy. It is estimated that 200,000 Kurds have been murdered by Saddam Hussein's military forces. Hundreds of thousands more have been uprooted and live in the inhospitable terrain of northern Iraq where food and shelter are scarce. And amidst this despair, Saddam's regime continues to attack Kurdish villages throughout Iraq.

Despite these hardships, the Kurdish people have not given up hope for a better life. Carrying out democratic elections that will create democratic institutions is a manifestation of these desires. Additionally, free and fair democratic elections in Kurdistan would also set an important example for democracy in Iraq and the Persian Gulf region.

Mr. Speaker, the Kurdish people are suffering great hardships at the hands of Saddam Hussein and an international community that has shown little inclination to help. On May 17, the Kurds will take measures to help themselves. The U.S. Government and the international community should pay close attention to the elections in Kurdistan and encourage its neighbors to pursue a similar democratic course.

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF JOE AND BEULAH POTTER

HON. RON de LUGO

OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, two of the most wonderful people I know, Joe and Beulah Potter, celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary on May 10, 1992.

Few in our Virgin Islands are so beloved; the esteem in which they are held is an honor they have earned through two lifetimes of genuine concern and deep loyalty for family, friends, and community.

As highly respected and dearly held as we hold them as individuals, as a couple Joe and Beulah are truly unsurpassed. By bringing out the best in each other they bring forth the best in themselves. The strong and vibrant family they have nurtured is proof positive of the triumph of love, generosity, and understanding.

Today, I place in the RECORD an article that appeared recently in the Virgin Islands Daily News titled, "50 Years of Love," that well illustrates the personalities and the accomplishments of Joe and Beulah Potter.

50 YEARS OF LOVE

(By Athniel J. Thomas)

In these days, when even 20th anniversaries are growing scarce, Joe and Beulah Potter are celebrating their 50th year of marriage.

When asked for the secret of their long marriage, Joe Potter said, "If I knew, I'd write a book and be rich."

The Potters, who moved to the Virgin Islands from Harlem, N.Y., in 1967, credit their joyous years together to love, respect, trust, communications and the Bible.

"Corinthians I, in the New Testament, is all about love," the Potters said they slowly begin to reveal their secrets.

"We resolved our problems before the night's end because we laugh a lot and never forgot how to play."

The young Harlem couple first heard about the Virgin Islands from Joe Potter's mother, who spoke strongly of the promise the islands had in the 1940s. But with German warships cruising New York harbors, they delayed the visit.

After the death of his mother in the mid 1960s, the Potters decided to "visit the islands of her youth."

"We visited some friends and family in the islands in 1966, and we liked what we saw so much we came back to stay in February 1967."

Now, with their four kids and fond memories, the Potters say they have no regrets.

Beulah Potter worked for the federal government, which provided them with a house in Red Hook while they had a house built in Estate Tutu.

Joe Potter wanted to raise a family of all boys in that Tutu home, and he already had the names picked out: Joe Jr., Leslie, Jeffrey and Tommye.

But Joe Jr. was the only boy, much to the chagrin of the couple's three daughters.

"We didn't like the names at first," Tommye Alicia James said, "but we began to appreciate the uniqueness as we got older."

James said her parents taught their children to enjoy life and be responsible, lessons they still adhere to now.

"I remember when I was 12, I had to contribute a portion of my babysitting earnings to the household," James said.

"I couldn't understand then, but I'm still thanking him for that lesson."

The Potters also preached giving back to the community what they gained from it, and give back they did.

Joe Potter has served as president of the St. Thomas-St. John USO Council, board member of V.I. Special Olympics committee, Community Foundation of the V.I., American Cancer Society of St. Thomas, Caribbean Support Network on AIDS; Member of Rotary Club II, former president of the United Way.

Beulah Potter is a past president of League of Women Voters, assistant national representative for Retired Federal Employees, minister's assistant at the Lutheran Church of the Reformation and president of the Friends of Channel 12.

Joe Potter wrote a weekly sports column for The Daily News. He also hosted "Good Sports" at WBNB-TV on St. Thomas, but his wife started at the TV station first, hosting "The Julia Show," which modeled fashions from Marshall's Department Store.

The Potters expressed a yearning for good local talent in all areas of communication, especially in the rejuvenation of WBNB, which has not reopened since it was destroyed by Hurricane Hugo.

"Technology is constantly developing, and we cannot let the V.I. fall further behind," Joe Potter said.

And he said he hopes the next book about the Virgin Islands will be written with the unique, colorful vocabulary of a Virgin Islander.

The Potter family will hold a reunion this summer with 12 grandchildren, including Joe Nathan Potter III, and three great grandsons.

With 50 anniversaries behind them, the Potters' motto for the next 50 is, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it."

BRING BACK FROHNMAYER

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, the acting chair of the National Endowment for the Arts, Anne Imelda Radice, has set a course for the endowment which will as our colleague from Iowa, Mr. GRANDY once said, give its music the quality of Muzak and its literature the quality of the Congressional Record.

While the gentleman from Iowa was not speaking of Ms. Radice at the time, but rather of the Helms amendment, I think his admonition that "art becomes house paint" when the Government determines the content is equally valid. Ms. Radice is more subtle than Senator HELMS, but possibly more dangerous.

Ms. Radice says she'll veto art and other projects that deal with difficult subject matter.

When considering the artistic merit of proposals to fund the visual arts, paintings, photography, drama, music, dance, and literature she will give equal weight to the concerns of the taxpayers, and the concerns of Congress.

I wonder if she'll hire a pollster before funding a sculptor or, like Ross Perot, establish enormous town meetings in which voters from across the country could, using their telephones, render the Nation's collective judgment on Jasper Johns, Joyce Carol Oates or even Ricardo Mutti.

How crazy.

What Ms. Radice is providing is, again in the words of Mr. GRANDY:

> A hunting license to go after every single sculptor, or painter, or photographer whose work they find patently offensive.

The National Endowment for the Arts should encourage and sustain the creative process, the creative impulses of America's artists, especially, Mr. Speaker, those whose work may not, in fact, appeal to the popular or commercial standards so cherished by Ms. Radice.

It is the process, not the content, the NEA should fund.

There is no advance guarantee that a work of art will meet some common denominator of public or congressional taste.

In fact, demanding such a guarantee would only ensure a Nation in which elevator music, the Congressional Record and house paint would pass for officially sanctioned art.

One would think, Mr. Speaker, that the chair of the NEA could figure out these things for herself.

But what can the Nation expect, Mr. Speaker, from an administration that in a single breath blames the Los Angeles riots on over funded 1960's social programs and tells us the solution is tax breaks for business?

TRIBUTE TO KARL NEID

HON. BRUCE F. VENTO

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to my special friend, St. Paul City Councilman Karl Neid, who passed away in his sleep, at age 43 on Friday, May 8, 1992. I know I join many others in paying tribute to this special person who has spent his life working on behalf of others. His love of life and hard work has served and will continue to serve as an example for all who strive in public service. Karl Neid brought his sincerity and kindness to the people of Minnesota and has left a warm impression on all who knew him.

Karl seemed a tireless man who would arrange numerous meetings after normal work hours in the evening just to ensure that he met with all who sought to visit him. Just last week I met with Karl, one of his many nightly meetings, and we talked about new ways to continue to outreach into the community in which we both grew up—our beloved east side of St. Paul. Karl did not wait until an election year to reach out to people; he was in the neighborhoods and on the doorstep year round. He wanted to constantly understand what was on the minds and concerns of people in his community and elsewhere in Minnesota.

I have worked with Karl throughout the years on numerous projects, the Phalen Park restoration, neighborhood housing services on the bluff, and numerous political campaigns where he served as a volunteer. Karl had held nearly every office that existed in the Minnesota DFL political party. He had high respect and expectations for our party and his volunteer efforts were a labor of love in the political world. Karl volunteered at the Vento corn feed and organized the corn huskers—and he poured energy and dedication into this effort. Karl was a labor activist, a State DFL party chair, a church activist and a stellar volunteer in many, many campaigns and community efforts. He never turned away a request or let anyone down when they needed his help.

I join hundreds of Karl Neid's friends and family members in remembering Karl Neid and his lifetime of dedicated service. Karl Neid was the epitome of St. Paul's east side and was a true friend citywide to all of our community. In the political sphere, where you have a lot of temporary alliances, his constant reassurance was especially appreciated. My heartfelt thanks and recognition of his accomplishments and friendship and sincere sorrow at Karl Neid's passing.

I enter into the Record the editorial from the Pioneer Press from May 12, 1992, reflecting on the life of Karl Neid, a dear friend and inspiration.

KARL NEID—MODEL CITIZEN LOST

THE PRESIDENT'S REGULATORY MORATORIUM AND ECONOMIC GROWTH

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the amendment the gentleman from California [Mr. RIGGS] had hoped to offer to H.R. 4111 was not made in order. This amendment would have commended the President for his 120-day extension of the moratorium on the issuing of new regulations. I believe it would have been most appropriate for Congress to go on record in support of the President in this matter and I regret that we were not afforded this opportunity.

Earlier this year, the Ways and Means Committee, on which I serve, spent a great deal of time discussing ways to foster economic growth and create jobs through changes in the Tax Code. Despite the fact that we were unable to reach agreement on this issue, the President took other action, in the form of a 90-day regulatory moratorium, to provide economic relief for businesses in every region of the country. Each year, regulations cost our industries an estimated $400 to $500 billion. Moreover, the resulting higher prices for goods cost the average American household $4,000 to $5,000 annually. An example of this strangulation by regulation is the 1990 Clean Air Act, which required the Environmental Protection Agency to issue nearly 200 new regulations at an estimated expense to industry of $34 billion and created 684 million man-hours of paperwork over 5 years.

Since the President's regulatory moratorium went into effect, the unemployment rate dropped for the first time in a year and many people believe that the economy has begun to grow. I believe it would have been foolhardy for the President to let his moratorium expire in April and allow the Government to renew its vigor for issuing regulations. As a cosponsor of legislation urging the President to extend his moratorium for 1 year, I was pleased that he took the initiative in extending it for 120 days. I believe that this is an important step toward facilitating the Nation's economic recovery and regret that my colleagues were not able to consider the Riggs amendment and commend the President for his action.

INTRODUCTION OF NATIONAL VISITING NURSE ASSOCIATIONS WEEK

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I join my colleague, Mr. BURTON of Indiana, in introducing the resolution designating the week beginning February 14, 1993, as "National Visiting Nurse Associations Week."

While this is the fifth year we are honoring the good work of visiting nurse associations all across America, the VNA tradition dates back to the 1800's when thousands of Americans lacked the resources to secure medical care or even basic necessities—such as milk for their infants—that was so vital to improving the quality of life in our growing Nation. Visiting nurse associations began to spring up across the United States with the mission of providing basic nursing care to all who needed it.

These early pioneers were guided by a spirit of caring and compassion that still emanates from the over 420 visiting nurse associations operating in rural and urban areas across the United States. As a matter of fact, the Department of Health and Human Services estimates that VNA's are providing home health care and support services to more than 1.5 million men, women, and children—all regardless of the patient's ability to pay. In my own community, the 200 colon and rectal cancer patients who receive visits from VNA enterostomal therapists each month are just a small example of the thousands of people that the visiting nurse association in my hometown of Cleveland touches each year with their compassionate spirit.

Mr. Speaker, as a Member who had the privilege of serving on the Pepper Commission, I know well the crisis facing our citizens not only in affordability of access to health care, but with respect to long-term care. At a time when our Nation's health care costs are skyrocketing—and those with the greatest need of home care are increasingly those who can least afford it—visiting nurse associations are to be commended for providing a full range of health care and support services to patients in the comfort of their own home regardless of their ability to pay. As a unique health care delivery option, visiting nurse associations across America are nonprofit, community-based organizations that are committed to providing quality health care services to all people. In addition to providing medical care, VNA's offer social services; physical, speech, and occupational therapy; nutritional counseling; and meals-on-wheels programs. They also operate wellness clinics, hospices, and adult day care centers.

Today's VNA's are also at the forefront of bringing new and complex treatments into the home care setting, ensuring that health care is more accessible and more affordable. Supported in their efforts by legions of volunteers who commit selflessly of their time and resources, visiting nurse associations enable Americans to receive the health care services they need to recover, or die quietly—with dignity—in the familiar surrounding of their own homes.

By naming the week beginning February 14, 1993, "National Visiting Nurse Associations Week," we pay tribute to the thousands of hard-working, committed professionals and volunteers who carry on the tradition of service that visiting nurse associations have supplied our Nation for well over 100 years. We extol the modern day samaritans of visiting nurse associations so they may receive the appreciation and recognition they so justly deserve.

FLEXIBILITY FOR EDUCATIONAL EFFECTIVENESS ACT OF 1992

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing the Flexibility for Educational Effectiveness Act of 1992.

This bill establishes a new Federal Committee on Services to Children which is authorized to grant waivers of certain statutory and regulatory requirements in Federal education, nutrition, and training programs in 300 schools nationwide. This will enable these schools to combine these various program funds, sidestep cumbersome requirements, and experiment with innovative, comprehensive approaches to meeting the multiple educational needs of disadvantaged children.

Mr. Speaker, the Congress has traditionally identified unmet educational needs of groups of students and enacted categorical programs to address those specific needs. Each of these laws has specific eligibility, programmatic, and administrative requirements designed to ensure that intended recipients are actually served, that the authorized services are actually provided, and that the Congress and Federal agencies are apprised of the results. Many of these laws also include, for very good reasons, requirements designed to mandate or prohibit certain actions by Federal, State, or local agencies.

In recent years, we have observed dramatic increases in the numbers of disadvantaged children due to increases in the numbers of immigrants, children living in poverty, and dysfunctional families. Additionally, a disadvantaged child eligible for one program is usually also eligible for several other programs. In many cases, attempts to address multiple educational needs of a single child in separate programs results in discontinuity of services and the child may lose the benefit of some of the regular classroom instruction. It is time to explore the effectiveness of other ways of serving disadvantaged children and this bill provides a carefully structured opportunity to do so. Schools and school districts will select categories of programs to be combined with the Chapter 1 (Education for the Disadvantaged) Program for preschool, elementary, and/or secondary school flexibility projects. They are permitted to waive a broad range of requirements except for those pertaining to civil rights and privacy protections, antidiscrimination, comparability of services, maintenance of effort, supplement not supplant, participation of private students, and parental participation.

This bill provides a bottom-up process for selecting the requirements to be waived. School districts apply to the States on behalf of schools. States waive applicable State requirements and apply to a new Federal Committee on Services to Children, composed of the Secretaries of Education, Agriculture, Labor, and Health and Human Services, for authority to waive Federal requirements.

Finally, the bill contains requirements that States and local school districts make concerted efforts to coordinate the provision of education with health, mental health, substance abuse prevention and treatment, and social services and provides an application priority for those who do.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill. It will enable 300 schools to take available resources and attempt to make them work more efficiently and effectively for disadvantaged children. At the same time, it also provides for important linkages between programs like Chapter 1, Head Start, and National School Lunch.

MORTGAGE REFINANCING REFORM ACT OF 1992

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to address a problem that thousands of Americans are presently facing.

It is estimated that over 1.4 million households refinanced their mortgages in the past year and another 3 million new refinances are anticipated this year.

As chairman of the House Banking Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage, I have received numerous complaints in this area.

The problem is that consumers currently are not protected by disclosure laws that cover first-time home loans.

Existing law does not provide the consumer with timely information regarding the closing costs on a refinancing. For example, some consumers reach the closing stage of the loan process, only to find that they are paying more points or higher attorney fees than those which had been previously quoted.

The consumer may be faced with processing fees, warehousing fees, underwriting fees, and tax service fees that were previously undisclosed.

My bill, the Mortgage Refinancing Reform Act of 1992, will address this lack of consumer protection and require disclosure of the annual percentage rate 3 days before settlement on a mortgage refinancing. The bill will also require disclousre of closing costs and any fees that are part of settlement.

According to consumer experts and some mortgage industry executives, the practical effect of—the lack of disclosure—is to allow unscrupulous leaders or brokers to lure refinancers to their application windows with low rate quotes and verbal estimates of credit fees at application only to disclose higher fees in the truth-in-lending form at the settlement table.

In a recent newspaper article, an executive of a major national mortgage firm, requesting anonymity, was reported as saying that he had seen the harm the refinancing loophole can cause consumers firsthand.

In one case, he said, a mortgage broker had made a verbal estimate to a borrower that loan fees would total about $1,500.

The broker did not provide a written truth-in-lending disclosure estimate at application, according to the executive, "because he knew he didn't have to under the Federal law."

I am pleased that Senator ROTH has already introduced and passed legislation in the Senate to address this problem.

Lastly, a method by which unearned interest is calculated when refinancing or prepaying loans must be eliminated.

Most lenders are fair and use the actuarial method to compute unearned interest. However, in some cases lenders use an inaccurate shorthand method called the Rule of 78's to compute unearned interest, which award the lender with a greater level of interest paid early in the loan term. This shorthand method leaves the consumer shortchanged.

In effect, if the lender uses the Rule of 78, the consumer winds up paying off the loan and interest on money they did not end up using.

Sixteen states have already passed laws to prohibit the use of the Rule of 78's. Federal credit unions are prohibited from using the Rule of 78's.

In this day and age of computers and calculators, there is no excuse to use this antiquated accounting method to compute interest owed in a refinancing or prepayment.

The consumer mortgage refinancing legislation I am introducing today will prohibit the use of the Rule of 78's for calculating unearned interest.

I ask my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation by signing on as a cosponsor. The Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage will be holding a hearing on this issue on May 19, 1990.

A TRIBUTE TO EUCARIO BERMUDEZ

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, recently the Colombian community in Miami honored Eucario Bermudez for his 35 years of continuous service on the radio. The vice president of the Colombian-American Chamber of Commerce and the director of news of Radio Klaridad, Mr. Bermudez started his professional career as a radio announcer in the beautiful city of Manizales, in his native Colombia. His talent and dedication to his work proved fruitful and he was soon promoted from his position as announcer to director of the station "Nuevo Mundo." Later, Mr. Bermudez was further promoted to general director of CARACOL, one of the most respected radio chains in Colombia.

For many years, Eucario Bermudez was the director of the broadcast of the Reinado Nacional de Belleza of Cartagena (The National Beauty Pageant). He was also master of ceremonies of the first color TV broadcast in Colombia and was host and producer of TV programs which were quite popular, such as "Contamos Contigo," "Tierra Colombiana" y "Noticiero TV Hoy." He quickly earned the respect of his colleagues and was elected president of the Colombian Association of Broadcasters.

In the 1980's Mr. Bermudez, an excellent Colombian broadcaster, came to Miami. He pioneered many radio programs that highlighted the many beneficial aspects and progress of his native land. He continues to work as a Miami correspondent to the various radio stations in Colombia and is a member of the Association of Hispanic Journalists in Florida and the United States. He was appointed director of Radio Klaridad, which is a well respected radio station in Miami.

In his hope to give back to this Nation that welcomed him warmly, Eucario Bermudez has dedicated himself to make stronger the ties which hold together this beautiful Colombian community in the United States.

For his work, his commitment and dedication, Mr. Bermudez was acknowledged by the community that he serves. On Saturday, May 2, a large group of civic leaders as well as cultural and professional groups who work daily with all Hispanics in our area gave a much deserved banquet honoring this very special representative of Colombia.

A TRIBUTE TO GREENVILLE ELEMENTARY SCHOOL AND ITS YOUNG INVENTORS PROGRAM

HON. DICK SWETT

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. SWETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and applaud the fine work being done by the faculty, staff, and students of the Greenville Elementary School in Greenville, NH. In particular, they are to be commended for the Young Inventors Program which they have implemented.

This program, initiated by educators like Linda Farrington, provides children in their formative years with the fundamentals of practical problem-solving through proper planning and hands-on experimentation. Critical thinking skills, which are essential in every facet of life, are being developed in children as early as first grade, and are evidenced by the ability of these young students to identify problems and to seek out practical solutions to them.

A sterling example of the effectiveness of this program was the recent invention of Brian Winslow, a first grader at Greenville Elementary. He recognized that this schoolmate, Emmalee Coponon, was not able to handle her lunch tray because of interference from the walker which she must use for mobility. Through design and experiment, Brian created a device which attaches to the walker and allows Emmalee the freedom to be self-sufficient when getting her lunch. This single example illustrates not only the worth of the program from an inventive standpoint, but also how children develop compassionate interpersonal skills which they will use throughout their lives.

The Greenville Young Inventors Program is indicative of the kind of programs which public and private schools should adopt in order to spark the spirit of inventiveness and discovery in children. It is only through the fostering of such programs that today's youth will become leaders who are prepared to face and conquer the challenges of tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in commending the outstanding accomplishments of the faculty, staff, and students of Greenville Elementary School and their exemplary Young Inventors Program.

NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY

HON. MICHAEL A. ANDREWS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, you would think that we would have learned our lesson. Yet little more than a year after our victory in the Persian Gulf, the United States still has not enacted a long-term energy policy capable of enhancing national energy security and promoting economic growth. Refusing to manage our energy usage and domestic production wisely over the past 10 years has left us—as Saddam Hussein demonstrated—at the mercy of foreign oil cartels, despots and uncontrollable events in the Middle East. A continued laxity in energy policy will only increase that vulnerability.

What the United States needs as it heads into the next century is a truly integrated and comprehensive energy strategy. We must insist on increasing our use of domestic alternative and renewable fuels, demand aggressive efficiency and conservation standards, and prudently exploit our traditional domestic energy resources.

The erosion of our domestic energy sector is frightening. The industry has lost more than 317,000 jobs in just 10 years. The number of operating drilling rigs is at its lowest level in recorded history and domestic production continues to plummet. We produced only 7.3 million barrels per day in 1990—the lowest level in almost 30 years. Yet our appetite for oil continues to escalate with imports accounting for nearly 50 percent of our oil consumption, up from just 32 percent in 1985.

Meanwhile, American companies are increasingly searching for exploration and production opportunities overseas. A mass exodus overseas of domestic capital could potentially jeopardize the ability of the energy sector to rebound domestically even if economic conditions at home were to change.

During the Committee on Ways and Means markup of H.R. 776, the Comprehensive National Energy Policy Act, we achieved three vital goals: First, the establishment of tax incentives for the purchase of vehicles using clean-burning alternative fuels; second, an end to onerous alternative minimum tax restrictions on independent oil and gas producers; and third, the lifting of a hidden $15 billion tax on the oil and gas industry and consumers to fill the strategic petroleum reserve. Each of these victories should mean more domestic drilling for oil and gas, more jobs, and a stronger energy policy for America.

Tax incentives for alternative fuels has been one of my top priorities since 1988. Inclusion of this provision represents the culmination of years of working with the energy industry, the automotive industry, and the environmental community to determine how best to give the most efficient economic incentive to gain the greatest environmental benefit at the lowest cost. The result is a deduction for consumers who buy vehicles using clean fuels such as natural gas, methanol, ethanol, and electricity, as well as refueling stations for those vehicles.

This deduction should fit well with the requirements of the Clean Air Act that many fleet-owners convert to alternative fuel use. By providing a deduction for those who comply, this tax initiative will ease the economic burden on those committed to a clean environment. For many communities, this kind of tax incentive is crucial to improve our air quality. Houston is one of the most air polluted cities in America with much of the pollution caused by tailpipe emissions. Alternative fuels in our big cities are imperative if we are to make real and lasting progress.

Independent oil and gas producers have been hamstrung by the alternative minimum tax [AMT] since it was created in the Tax Reform Act of 1986. Created as a backstop to guarantee that all taxpayers pay a certain amount of tax, the AMT has unintentionally punished independents who typically are more willing to take risks on the sort of drilling that leads to significant new discoveries.

The AMT was never meant to substitute for the normal rules of taxation, but many independents have been paying the tax every year since it was enacted. This situation totally ignores the economic situation of the industry and partially as a result, the drilling rig count, the number of working seismic crews, and related economic activity are all at the lowest level in recorded history. The committee adopted an amendment offered by my colleague and fellow Houstonian BILL ARCHER to remedy this inequity and provide AMT relief for independent oil and gas producers.

Finally, the committee agreed to my amendment to eliminate a mandatory in-kind contribution to the strategic petroleum reserve [SPR]. By requiring all oil importers and purchasers of domestic crude to contribute a percentage of imports or purchases to the SPR, this provision would have amounted to a $15 billion tax on the oil and gas industry and consumers. While filling the SPR is an admirable goal and one that could benefit us all, it would be fairer to finance such a plan with a straightforward appropriation of general revenues.

After too much neglect, inconsistency, and lack of direction, this Nation must unite in promoting an aggressive and innovative energy policy for our future. Decisions that we make in this Congress will affect our Nation's energy future for decades to come and those decisions should be made now.

While what we recently accomplished in the Committee on Ways and Means counts as a good success for a national energy policy, more needs to be done. By continuing to work with the energy industry, the environmental community, and public policymakers we can build a consensus to enhance energy security, promote economic growth, and protect the environment in a free market, economically efficient manner.

CONNIE SHORB

HON. WILLIAM F. GOODLING

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend to my colleagues the exploits of my constituent and friend Connie Hirschman Shorb. To honor her, Connie Shorb Day will be celebrated with a mixed doubles golf tournament at the Country Club of York in Pennsylvania on Sunday, May 17, 1992.

Connie Shorb has distinguished herself as a great amateur golf champion in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and throughout the country. Ms. Shorb competed in her first club championship at the Country Club of York when she was 16 years of age, too young to use the ladies locker room. Through she did not win that first club tournament, she went on to be the Country Club of York Champion for 26 straight years from 1965 to 1990. She continues to remind today's younger women's players that the course was significantly longer when she began winning the club championships. Connie Shorb's skill led her to 20 York County Championships as well. This feat, though great, may have been even greater had she competed each year throughout this span.

Connie's exploits extended throughout the State when she became the Central Pennsylvania Champion in 1968 and again in 1969. Her level of play continued to improve as she faced better competition. She earned the title of Pennsylvania State Champion in 1968, 1972, and 1974, in addition to being runner-up several times before.

Connie Shorb competed in such national tournaments as the Doherty, Amateur of America, and Trans Mississippi Championships. She competed in her first USGA Women's Amateur Championship in 1969. During the late 1980's, Ms. Shorb competed in the USGA Women's Mid-Amateur Championship. Connie Shorb played with the best women golfers in the world in the USGA Women's Open Championship five times, her first at the Cascades course in Hot Springs, VA in 1967.

As she is being honored this weekend, her community has recognized her achievements in the past. She has received many honors, including: Sportsman of the Year in 1970; Distinguished Achievement Award, York Chamber of Commerce; York County Sports Hall of Fame, 1981; York County Jr. Golf Sports Hall of Fame, 1982; and the York Daily Record Athlete of the Decade for the 1980's.

Connie Shorb's accomplishments during the late 1960's alone would have made her deserving of Connie Shorb Day which is being celebrated. Connie Shorb has maintained a high level of playing excellence for a period of 25 years. As many of my colleagues know, golf is a sport of incredible skill and patience. To be able to maintain this level of physical skill and mental fortitude over such a period of time is a remarkable feat indeed.

It is my pleasure to share with my colleagues the truly noteworthy accomplishments of Connie Shorb in the world of amateur golf.

TRIBUTE TO LETTIE GAY CARSON

HON. HAMILTON FISH, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me in honoring the memory of a very special lady, and personal friend, who touched the lives of all of those around her—Lettie Gay Carson.

Lettie passed away recently at the age of 91. She was known in Dutchess County, NY as one of the founders of the Mid-Hudson Library System and as the leading advocate to save the Harlem Railroad Line in the eastern part of the county.

She was born in 1901 in Pike County, IL. She graduated from the University of Illinois, trained as a nutritionist and moved to New York in the early 1920's where she was director of the New York Herald Tribune's Home Institute from 1927 to 1933. She later worked as an editor and writer for Parents Magazine.

In 1959, Lettie led the planning committee to create the Mid-Hudson Library System, an organization of public libraries offering services systemwide to people in Dutchess, Columbia, Ulster, Greene, and Putnam counties. Prior to her initiative, library services in parts of these counties were meager or nonexistent.

As founder and president of the Harlem Valley Transportation Association [HTVA], she delayed the shutdown of rail service, NYC to Millerton, by nearly a decade and was responsible for keeping the tracks to Wassaic for continued freight service. The HTVA successfully sued Penn Central in a case that had national implications. A Federal district judge ruled that railroad service couldn't be stopped without rail operators first showing that abandonment would not harm the surrounding human environment.

Diminutive in size, Lettie's spirit was indomitable. She was hard-working and an avid collector of facts and information. As a former journalist, she knew how effectively to use the press. Her persistence and careful recitation of facts kept reporters following her causes. She pushed hard to hold public bodies accountable, to see that money was well spent and that meetings were open to everyone.

After moving to Pennsylvania in 1980, she carried on her crusade, fighting to save rail transportation in her suburban Philadelphia community and creating an Alliance for Public Transportation.

The legacy Lettie Carson leaves us is that, yes through persistence and determination, one person can and does make a difference.

Mr. Speaker, people's lives don't just stop when they do. The good they do goes on—in the events they set in motion and in the example they set for others. At a time when there are too few role models for our young people, the shining example set by Lettie Carson continues to inspire those she left behind.

IGA: DOING BUSINESS IN JAPAN

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, some time ago I brought to the attention of our colleagues the success of the Caterpillar Co. in Japan. I said at the time that this success shows Americans can complete and thrive in a tough economic arena. Today, I'd like to bring to your attention another success story of a similar kind.

In my congressional district, I am fortunate to have 17 members of the Independent Grocers Alliance [IGA]. This organization was formed in the United States in 1926. Its mission then was to find ways in which independent grocers could better serve consumers through cooperation. IGA started with a few small independent stores. Today, this alliance has grown into the largest voluntary food group, with aggregate sales of more than $16.2 billion annually through its global alliance of 3,750 supermarkets, ranking IGA sixth in the world and third in North America in food industry sales. IGA stores are located in the 48 contiguous States in the United States, Japan, Canada, Australia, and Papua, New Guinea.

In 1987, independent food retailers from Japan began to join the IGA. This process transformed IGA into the International Grocers Alliance.

These businessmen work together for the common benefit of their consumers without regard for international barriers. Their objectives are to serve their customers better than anyone else. This is a classic example of the free market system at work to build bridges of friendship in the highest tradition of international cooperation.

To any who seek a model for teamwork between the two most powerful economic giants in the world today, I recommend to you the spirit of IGA. The marketing image of IGA is based on hometown proud. This commitment to excellence is as applicable in Osaka as it is in Oklahoma or Illinois.

CONGRESSMAN KILDEE HONORS FLINT CENTRAL HIGH ALUMNI AND GRADUATES

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to rise before you today to pay tribute to the outstanding graduates, both past and present, of Flint Central High School. These graduates will be recognized at the 1st Annual Flint Central High School Alumni Association awards ceremony on May 14, 1992, at 7 p.m., at the Grand Blanc Country Club.

Flint Central High will always hold a special place in my heart. I taught history, Latin and English there for 8 wonderful years. Many of my former students remain active as alumni. It is indeed a pleasure to see Central High School's long record of academic excellence continue with the present graduating class.

Being awarded the Flint Central alumni scholarship is not the end, but the beginning, of a life-long commitment to academic excellence. It is my hope that each 1992 scholarship recipient will be recognized, in later years, as an outstanding graduate. The winners of this year's $500 Flint Central alumni scholarship are Benjamin Bigelow, Spaci Gatica, James Godley, Timothy MacDonald, and Dayne Walling.

These fine young men and women will join the revered ranks of alumni who have received regional and national recognition for their outstanding achievements in their fields. The individuals honored at this year's banquet are a true testament to this remarkable legacy: Paul L. Brady, the Nation's first black Federal administrative law judge; Lloyd Brazil, deceased, one of the first seven inductees into the Greater Flint area sports hall of fame; Maurie B. Cossman, former sports writer and editor for the Flint Journal; Romain Johnston, winner of three Emmy awards and nationally renowned art director; and Margaret L.A. MacVicar, deceased, former dean of undergraduate education at Massachusetts Institute of Technology and founder of its undergraduate research opportunities program.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honor and a privilege for me to ask you and my fellow Members of Congress to join me in paying tribute to the outstanding graduates and alumni of Flint Central High School. Their achievements serve as a model for all Americans.

TRIBUTE TO JEAN K. SPEES

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to bring to the attention of my colleagues the fine work of one of my constituents, Ms. Jean K. Spees, who is retiring after a long and superlative career as a teacher and leader in the community.

Jean K. Spees will retire as director of Linda Beach Preschool at the end of this year after a 22-year career. Past and present parents and friends will gather to honor her at a reception on May 16, 1992.

Jean has balanced a long career of public service as a hospital clinical dietician, journalist, early childhood specialist, parent, and active community volunteer.

Jean is a graduate of Oregon State University where she majored in hospital dietetics and early childhood education. She graduated Phi Beta Kappa, was editor of the women's page of the college newspaper, and was a member of the Mortar Board.

Her career began as a dietician, first at St. Luke's hospital in Boise, ID, and then as chief dietician at Columbia Hospital for Women in Washington, DC. Following a family move and the arrival of her second son, Jean began working part time as a reporter for the Charleston, WV Gazette, and the Petersburg, WV News.

After another move, this time to Oakland, CA in 1959, and the arrival of two more children, Jean attended Merritt College to complete the requirements necessary for receiving her early childhood teaching credential. She then became director of Linda Beach Preschool, serving both Oakland and Piedmont children.

During her 22 years at Linda Beach, she has helped more than 800 children prepare for their life at school—learing to share, listen, learn and ultimately, grow into successful students and youths. At the same time she has taught parenting and served as a role model for many young parents learning to cope with careers and young children.

Jean has a long career of public service: president of Joaquin Miller PTA; co-president of Montera Junior High PTA; co-founder and long time board member of the national educational film and video festival, co-founder and early participant in the Oakland tours program; a member of the first class of the Oakland Museum's history documents program; Girl Scout leader, member of the Foundation Board of Lincoln Child Center, and co-president of the East Bay cotillion.

She has also been a member of the landmarks preservation advisory board since 1980 and has assisted her husband, Oakland City Councilmember Richard Spees, in many public appearances.

In addition to all of her achievements, Jean and her husband have raised four children: Richard, Jr, an attorney in Washington, DC; John, a vice president with the Bank of America in San Francisco; Kathryn, a teacher in Kona, HI, and Patricia, the executive vice-president and chief of operating officer of St. Jude's Hospital in Fullerton. Jean is also an active grandmother to her three grandsons.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to share the work of this fine constituent with my colleagues and I wish her the very best in her retirement.

THE SPORTS STANDARDS ACT OF 1992

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which addresses a narrow but important problem faced by sports organizations in the United States.

The goal of the Sports Standards Act of 1992 is to promote the administration of amateur sports by protecting qualifying sports organizations from needless litigation over the setting of equipment standards and rules of competition.

In addition to promoting their sports, amateur sports organizations often adopt official rules of competition, which frequently include equipment standards. No one would argue against an organizing body setting the standards of competition for its sport. After all, competition is meaningless unless it is based on a consistent set of rules.

Setting rules often requires an amateur sports organization to consult with other national and international organizations. Unfortunately, it is this consultation which has landed amateur sports organizations in court, defending against charges of participating in unlawful conspiracies in restraint of trade.

Manufacturers of nonconforming equipment regularly file suit against amateur sports organizations, which must then spend enormous sums to defend their legitimate actions in court. To cite just one example, the U.S. Golf Association has had to defend itself against golf shoe and golf club manufacturers who produced equipment which did not meet the USGA's standards.

This is an unfair burden on organizations which set rules solely to preserve the integrity of their sport, not to keep manufacturers out of a particular market. Moreover, the threat of these suits discourages the consultation necessary to maintain uniform competitive conditions both here and abroad.

My bill would simply clarify that a non-profit amateur sports organizations, which functions as the rule-making body for the sport is exempt for liability for actions taken in good faith pursuant to consultations concerning rules and equipment standards for national and international competition. Specifically, the bill would recognize the right of such organizations to engage in consultations with similarly situated bodies in the United States and overseas.

The bill's protection would extend only to not-for-profit corporations which have as their purpose the advancement of amateur athletic competition. It would not affect the liability of any for-profit corporation for any action that may be in violation of the law. Nor would it protect not-for-profit organizations from other independent claims, such as product liability claims.

Mr. Speaker, athletic competition requires that someone make the rules of play. Amateur sports organizations are formed in large part to perform that function. However, those who serve on these organizations cannot be free to adopt proper rules with the constant threat of antitrust litigation hanging over their heads. The Sports Standards Act would remove that threat and let these organizations go about the business of promoting and organizing amateur competition.

CONGRESSMAN FISH TO BE HONORED BY AMERICAN BANKRUPTCY INSTITUTE

HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, the American Bankruptcy Institute is an organization that makes a major contribution to national understanding of bankruptcy-related issues. Its membership of approximately 3,500 includes lawyers, trustees, accountants, bankers, and others with a professional interest in bankruptcy. Congress often relies on ABI witnesses to present informed and dispassionate testimony on proposals for bankruptcy law reform. ABI newsletters and studies provide thoughtful analysis and commentary on a variety of bankruptcy-related subjects. This year, as the American Bankruptcy Institute celebrates its 10th anniversary, we reflect on its many accomplishments and look forward to its helpful input in the the years ahead.

During the May 15–18 time period, that ABI holds its annual spring meeting in Washington—with sessions on a range of bankruptcy topics. The closing event will include the presentation of the Second Annual Congressional Service Award. Our colleague, Congressman HAMILTON FISH, Jr., the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, will receive this special recognition.

I am delighted to commend the American Bankruptcy Institute on its selection of the gentleman from New York. Congressman FISH has been deeply involved in the development and passage of many bankruptcy law changes and has been at the forefront of bankruptcy reform efforts for many years. Today, at a time of increased national focus on the bankruptcy system, he challenges the Congress to devote increased attention to improving our bankruptcy laws.

The Members of this body congratulate Congressman FISH on a well deserved award and express our appreciation to ABI for its commitment to public service.

SOCIAL SECURITY PAYMENTS SUBSIDIZE JUNKIES

HON. AUSTIN J. MURPHY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to alert the Congress to the sad fact that the Social Security Administration in currently ladling out millions of dollars in disability payments to alcoholics and drug addicts who claim that they are unable to work because of the addiction. It's true, and it's part of current law.

The payment was authorized under a 1974 law that permits alcoholics and drug addicts to be classified as disabled, making them eligible for SSI payments even if they've never worked or paid into the Social Security fund. The maximum disability payment now authorized is $442 a month plus any supplementary State benefits, which vary according to need.

SSI payments are not made to the addicts directly. Checks go to a supposedly responsible third party who is expected to provide funds to the addict as required. Spokesman for the Social Security Administration readily concede that it is not easy to find really responsible third parties.

When this program was brought to my attention by a constituent of mine, Mr. Anthony Purcell, Sr., of Greensburg, PA, I was shocked and astounded. As a public servant, I know that part of my responsibility is looking out for those citizens overcome by life's difficulties. The Government should always be responsible to the electorate, and we must always be here to help victims of disease, drugs and crime. But, inherent in that mission to help, however, is an enormous accountability to spend the tax dollars of Americans in the wisest and most judicious manner possible. In this case, we are missing both of these goals.

Throwing good money at a serious problem like drug and alcohol abuse is not a solution. I support funding for programs to help these trouble citizens, but only when there is thorough and scrupulous accounting of all the funds. Continuing these payments does nothing more than fund a vicious cycle of destructive and painful substance abuse.

When so many deserving sections of society are crying out for scarce public funds from the Federal Government we should be ashamed to waste money in useless programs like this. I call on the Social Security Program to remember that accountability is the soundest foundation of all aid programs. Please remedy this mess.

END FRIVOLOUS USE OF THE RECORD

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, today I am, seemingly contradictorily, inserting this extension of remarks to achieve a cost-saving House reform; an end to the frivolous and costly use of special orders and extensions of remarks.

I am grateful to the 22 colleagues who are joining me in introducing this resolution today.

Every day, extensions and special orders consume many pages in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages that cost in excess of $2 million a year to print. And that does not include the costs of mailing a dubiously swollen RECORD to thousands of recipients.

Nor does the $2 million represent the cost in tens of thousands of hours of staff time that is spent researching and writing these tomes, staff time that could, and should, instead be spent on addressing the many urgent issues that are before the Congress and the Nation. But my resolution would limit their use to legislative and policy questions that are before the House, including explanations of legislation Members are introducing, comments on bills before the House, and the actions of other branches of government. These are appropriate.

The credibility of the Congress is not enhanced when millions of viewers tune in C-SPAN and see a lone Member pontificating on some irrelevant issue before an empty Chamber. Constituents ask me, and I am sure ask you, "Why aren't you people spending your time addressing real issues instead of giving speeches to empty Chambers?" The fact is they are right: We ought to spend more time legislating and less time speechifying. And approval of my resolution will send that message loud and clear.

I realize that there are Boy and Girl Scout troops, art exhibitions, 50-year anniversary celebrants, and Kiwanis/Lions/Rotary/Moose People of the Year who will not be honored in the Extensions of Remarks if this rule change passes. I think the Republic can survive the loss. I think every one of those Americans would rather have us, and our staffs, working on the urgent national business rather than penning congratulatory missives for the RECORD.

I realize that the savings aren't enormous, just $2 or $3 million a year. But considering that amount represents many times the lifetime tax payments of nearly every one of our constituents, I think we can agree forgoing these traditions is appropriate. I am hopeful that the House will adopt this overdue change and demonstrate that we are going to devote ourselves to serious public business in the future.

TRIBUTE TO JIM MILLER

HON. DAVE CAMP

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to recognize a special individual, Mr. Jim Miller, from Midland, MI. Jim is being honored tonight as the recipient of the 1992 Association for Retarded Citizens/Michigan Citizenship Award.

Jim has been a good friend, giving unselfishly of his time to benefit organizations throughout the county. His involvement with the League of Woman Voters Program helped to increase voting among those with disabilities, as well as helping them to become more active in our democratic process. He is currently serving on the regional interagency coordinating committee "Get out the Vote" steering committee, in addition to being an active member in the People First Organization.

Jim's continual commitment and dedication to the betterment of the community, also allowed him to be honored earlier this year with the Midland County Association Retarded Citizens Citizenship award.

Jim's activities display a positive union between government and its local citizens working together, hand in hand, to impact a difference in the daily lives of their community residents.

Mr. Speaker, Jim Miller is truly a remarkable individual. I know that you will join with me in congratulating Jim on receiving this truly outstanding award and wishing him success in future endeavors.

JACK CAPPS HONORED

HON. BEN ERDREICH

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. ERDREICH. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to thank one of Alabama's most outstanding citizens, Mr. Jack Capps. This 64-year-old volunteer is working to return what was labeled "Alabama's dirtiest lake," Bayview Lake, to its original natural beauty.

Years ago, Jack came to my office with nothing more than just a dream. I was glad to help. Together, we brought the plight of this lake to the attention of the USX Corp., the Resource Conservation and Development Council, the city of Birmingham, and Jefferson County. With their help, we were able to work with the Bayview Lake Cleanup Association to help turn this dream into reality. Today, the duckweed that once filled Bayview Lake has been replaced by hundreds of fish, and the trash that once lined its shores is slowly disappearing. But Jack Capps didn't stop there, he continues to work to raise money and donates his time and efforts to rid this lake of trash and debris.

Jack Capps was recently hospitalized with a prolonged illness and can no longer walk through the beauty he worked so hard to preserve. But Jack has left a legacy, hundreds of volunteers committed to the same ideals he stands for, preserving America's natural resources for all to enjoy, and for that, Jack, Alabama thanks you.

Mr. Speaker, it was said at a recent testimonial honoring Jack that he is what America is all about; I wholeheartedly agree. We all look forward to the future, inspired by Jack Capps' strength and good works.

TRIBUTE TO LUCIEN D. TRUHILL UPON HIS RETIREMENT

HON. C. CHRISTOPHER COX

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. COX of California. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to rise and pay tribute to one of Orange County's truly outstanding citizens, Mr. Lucien D. Truhill. Mr. Truhill, president and chief executive officer of the Orange County Chamber of Commerce, has announced his retirement effective May 15, 1992, after 30 years of service to the chamber and the people of Orange County. As Mr. Truhill begins a new phase of his life with this announcement, his tremendous contributions to his community, his State, and his country will not be forgotten.

When Mr. Truhill became president of the chamber in 1962, the chamber had fewer than 200 members and an annual budget of approximately $18,000. Today, the chamber boasts almost 1,700 members and an annual operating budget of more than $1,000,000. Under the leadership of Mr. Truhill, the Orange County Chamber of Commerce has received national recognition from local, State, and Federal agencies and has participated actively in every facet of Orange County's growth.

Under Lucien Truhill's leadership, accomplishments during the last 30 years have been many for the chamber and for Orange County. Mr. Truhill worked on the original plans for the county's developing highway and freeway system, as well as the planning and implementation of the Orange County Transit District and the subsequent bus system. He was involved from the start with the Santa Ana River Flood Control Project, which has recently been awarded full funding in the Federal budget.

Mr. Truhill has also participated in numerous other noteworthy endeavors. He has been a member of the American Economic Development Council since 1961. He was an executive committee member of the regional advisory council for the Southern California Association of Governments as well as chairman of the Economic Development Corporation of Orange County. Mr. Truhill also served as chairman of the Orange County Metro Alliance of Business, where he received a Presidential citation for his work.

Mr. Truhill has been an active member of numerous charities and other organizations. In fact, Mr. Truhill is currently serving as a director of Goodwill Industries, Inc., in Orange County.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that Mr. Truhill's contributions over the years characterize the American spirit of hard work and dedication. I know that Mr. Truhill will continue to give of himself throughout his retirement both to his community and to his country. It is with great pleasure that I bring Lucien Truhill's accomplishments to the attention of the Congress of the United States and the American people, and offer my thanks to him on the eve of his retirement for his years of service.

TRIBUTE TO LISA THOMAS

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to pay tribute to a remarkable young eighth-grader from Wellston, OH. On May 1, Lisa Thomas was honored in the Rotunda of the Capitol by the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council for her essay "The Final Solution", which was judged the best of approximately 4,000 contest entries.

Encouraged by her English teacher to enter this contest, with the theme of "What Lessons Can Be Learned from The Holocaust", Lisa decided to research and write about a topic she said she knew little about and wanted to better understand. She read numerous books and articles, including "The Hiding Place," written by the famous Auschwitz survivor Corrie Ten Boom, who was imprisoned for helping Jews during the war.

Lisa worked on her entry for months, and after many revisions, wrote her essay, in dialogue form, which places Adolf Hitler on trial.

God, as the judge, sentences Hitler to a prison camp exactly like the camps in which millions of Jews suffered.

Watching the trial are many spectators persecuted under Hitler. One character named Anna Marie asks God about the suffering experienced during the Holocaust. God answers, "A lesson child. A lesson for all men, everywhere, a lesson to never underestimate the capacity of man for evil, once he forgets God or refuses to acknowledge anything or anyone higher."

Mr. Speaker, that is a lesson that should be remembered by all. We honor the sacrifices of those persecuted by never forgetting. And, I would like to congratulate Lisa for her award, as well as thank her for helping us to remember.

THE U.S. HEALTH CRISIS

HON. JIM MOODY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday May 14, 1992

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I know that we all hear stories from home about people who are falling through the abundant cracks of the current U.S. health care system. I have recently become acquainted with a woman who's story I would like to share with my colleagues. Georgia Fitzwilliams is working to unite the voices of people in Wisconsin who are crying out for health care reform.

Ms. Fitzwilliam's new granddaughter, Maggie, was born with a liver condition called biliary atresia. Without a liver transplant—which is 85 percent effective—she will die.

Maggie's parents have health insurance and thought they were fully covered until Maggie's illness was diagnosed. Then they learned that the HMO to which they belong, and pay a $350 monthly premium, does not cover treatment for this particular disease.

Maggie needs the transplant to live, so the Fitzwilliams began investigating other payment alternatives. Before their daughter could even be placed on the list for organ transplants they needed to come up with $130,000. There was no question that a highly successful treatment existed, but the treatment was off-limits without enormous financial resources.

Maggie is lucky. The family discovered the Katie Beckett Program—a State program for disabled children that will pay for the transplant. However, had Maggie been an adult in the same situation, she would not have qualified.

Led by Maggie's grandmother Georgia Fitzwilliams, the family made their story public. As Georgia said. "If they said she was terminal—take her home and hug her, she has 6 months to live—that's one thing. But they're saying its $130,000 up front. I know we're going to find the money—we'll find the way to get it. But what about all the families who can't? If my granddaughter dies or doesn't die, this needs to be done."

Georgia has taken this debate even further. She has requested that people write to tell her their stories of trying to obtain health care in today's system. To date, she has received more than 200 letters telling stories similar to that of her family's. Many of the letters include contributions, but she is sending the money back. What she wants is for people to come forward and agree with her that change is needed. Such change may not be easy, but she is convinced that Americans are ready to make the necessary choices to move the debate forward.

Her granddaughter's illness has propelled Georgia Fitzwilliams to the front of the health care reform debate in Wisconsin. She adds a much needed element. Her family thought they were fine. I'm sure they complained about paying too much for health insurance like we all do, but they thought these costs would secure them from financial ruin in the case of a serious illness. Instead, they were left out in the cold—left without insurance for their daughter's illness, without $130,000 just to pursue treatment—the actual cost of such treatment will soar much higher.

I agree with Georgia Fitzwilliams. It is unconscionable that we withhold medically proven treatment from individuals based on their ability to pay. It is happening across the United States. The 200-plus stories collected in Wisconsin are only a microcosm of the crisis.

What is most maddening is that we, as a country, have the ability to repair this wrong. If we gather the political will to pass a single payer health care system in the United States, stories like Maggie's will be only historical ancedotes.

In the House of Representatives, we now have 70 cosponsors of H.R. 1300, the Universal Health Care Act. I urge my colleagues to talk to their constituents, hear their stories, and join us in pursuing a health care system for our country that will provide universal access, ensure cost containment, maintain patient choice, and cost less money as a Nation than we spend today.

As Members of Congress who are elected to represent our constituents, it is imperative that each of us become involved in the debate for health care reform. Once you look at all the facts and statistics, the clear winner for America is H.R. 1300, the Universal Health Care Act.

TRIBUTE TO VICTORIA CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH OF JAMAICA, NY

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Victoria Congregational Church of Jamaica, NY. The congregation of this church will be celebrating 75 years of service to God, and to the local community on Sunday, June 7.

This church was founded in 1917 by the Reverend Egbert C. Macklin, and services were held in a small, borrowed building, that some said should have been condemned. For years the youth group of the church held 5-cent ham suppers to raise money for a new building that would be more worthy of the religious services to be performed there.

On Sunday, March 18, 1923, Reverend Macklin was joined by some of the most distinguished preachers of the time, including Dr. Fosdick, Dr. Jefferson, Dr. S. Parks Cadman, and dedicated the present building to the service of God. The cost was $51,000, a staggering amount for those times. Most of these funds had been raised through youth group suppers.

Since those times, the members of the congregation of this church have done much to benefit the Jamaica community. They have volunteered in areas such as health and hospital services, aided in the formation of a local family court, and developed the Adult Center of Jamaica to care for the elderly of the community, and have participated in many other charitable activities.

Mr. Speaker, I ask all of our colleagues in the House to rise and join me in honoring Reverend Macklin and the generous and caring congregation of the Victoria Congregational Church of Jamaica, NY, on the occasion of their 75th anniversary of service to God and to the local community.

H.R. 1747, THE INDIAN ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ACT

HON. JOHN J. RHODES III

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, as we consider legislation to help urban communities struggling to combat poverty and violence, let us not forget the hardest hit communities in our country—Indian reservations. Native American tribes are dealing with some of the harshest economic conditions in our country. Unemployment and poverty are rampant on reservations across the country. In Arizona, 43 percent of the native Americans are unemployed and seeking work. On some reservations, the unemployment rate is over 70 percent, according to the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Indian tribes across the United States have tried to provide money and jobs to their communities through the revenues generated by bingo and other gaming activities. These tribes are trying to become more self-reliant and are improving the programs and services they provide to their communities.

Yesterday, special agents from the Federal Bureau of Investigation seized about 700 video gambling machines during early-morning raids at five Arizona Indian reservations. An 8-hour standoff between FBI agent and Indians ensued during one of the raids at the Fort McDowell Indian Reservation which is about 20 miles northeast of Phoenix. Indians blocked the agents from taking the machines from the reservation. Thankfully, cooler heads prevailed and violence was avoided. A temporary agreement negotiated by Governor Fife Symington was reached between the U.S. attorney's office and the tribe.

Congress must provide alternative economic stimulation for the tribes. Both Congressmen BYRON DORGAN and I have sponsored legislation to extend the enterprise zone concept and program to Indian tribes and Indian reservations. Enterprise zones and the accompanying tax incentives will bring prospects for new jobs in Indian communities.

HON. ANDY IRELAND

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, in honor of Small Business Week and the hardworking men and women of the small business community, I am pleased to introduce, with Mrs. Meyers of Kansas, Ms. Molinari, Mr. Fields, Mr. Ramstad, Mr. Lipinski, Mr. Oxley, Mr. Moorhead, Mr. Burton of Indiana, Mr. Martin, and Mr. Lightfoot, the Small Business Cost Estimate Act of 1992.

This bill requires the Congressional Budget Office to prepare an estimate of the costs imposed on small businesses by any significant bill or resolution reported out of any committee, except Appropriations. This estimate will be appended to the bill for the information of the Members during consideration on the floor.

The purpose of the Small Business Cost Estimate Act is simple—to give Members of Congress an idea of the effect we have on small business on almost every occasion we pass legislation. We have to stop legislating in a vacuum, and this bill will allow some fresh outside air into our deliberations.

I see this bill as the legislative equivalent of the Regulatory Flexibility Act of 1980. That bill requires all Federal agencies to estimate the impact on small business when they promulgate new regulation and consider if there are alternatives. Furthermore, on April 29, 1992 President Bush ordered the heads of all Departments and Agencies to begin determining the costs and benefits of proposed legislation and furnishing that information to Congress and the people. I want Congress to start doing the same thing. How many bills have we passed here with the best of intentions but with little or no thought to their real impact on the people we serve, and how often have we ever seen real alternatives?

At a recent hearing I heard several hours of testimony from the small business community on the impact of Government regulation. Calling this testimony "horror stories" would be indulging in understatement. To the men and women who are trying to make the American dream come true, our actions are a nightmare. Every year the Federal Register publishes over 50,000 pages of new regulations from 1,400 Federal agencies and commissions. We often rail about Government regulation but I don't think we realize or want to acknowledge how much of it derives solely from our actions.

The Small Business Cost Estimate Act will help us take stock of our actions. It will give us the information we need to make informed decisions that will achieve our goals and retain our economic competitiveness. I urge all my colleagues to join me, Mrs. Meyers of Kansas, Ms. Molinari, and Messrs. Fields, Ramstad, Lipinski, Oxley, Moorhead, Burton of Indiana, Martin, and Lightfoot in supporting the Small Business Cost Estimate Act and making Congress a more responsive institution.

H.R. 5177

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Small Business Cost Estimate Act of 1992".

SEC. 2. CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ANALYSIS.

"SMALL BUSINESS COST ANALYSIS BY CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE

"Sec. 404. (a) The Director of the Congressional Budget Office shall, to the extent practicable, prepare for each bill or resolution of a public character reported by any committee of the House of Representatives or the Senate (except the Committee on Appropriations of each House), and submit to such committee—

"(1) an estimate of the costs which would be incurred in carrying out such bill or resolution in the fiscal year in which it is to become effective and in each of the 4 fiscal years following such fiscal year, together with the basis for each such estimate

"(2) an estimate of the cost which would be incurred by small businesses in carrying out or complying with any significant bill or resolution in the fiscal year in which it is to become effective and in each of the 4 fiscal years following such fiscal year, together with the basis for each such estimate; and

"(3) a comparison of the estimates of costs described in paragraphs (1) and (2) with any available estimates of costs made by such committee or by an Federal agency.

The estimates, comparison, and description so submitted shall be included in the report accompanying such bill or resolution if timely submitted to such committee before such report is filed.

"(b) For purposes of subsection (a)(2), the term 'small business' has the same meaning as the term 'small-business concern' in section 3(a) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632(a)).

"(c) For purposes of subsection (a)(2), the term 'signifcant bill or resolution' is defined as any bill or resolution which in the judgment of the Director of the Congressional Budget Office is likely to result in an average annual cost to a small business of $1,000 or more, or is likely to have exceptional fiscal consequences for a geographic region or a particular industry segment.".

(b) Conforming Amendment.—The table of contents set forth in section 2(b) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 404 the following new item:

THE SUCCESSFUL CAPTURE OF THE INTELSAT SATELLITE

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the crew of the space shuttle Endeavour on their successful capture and repair of the Intelsat communications satellite. This event marks another significant step forward in learning how to work in space, and serves as an important reminder that the Nation has a civil space program of which we all can be proud.

This satellite rescue shows how the manned and unmanned parts of the space program can effectively complement—not compete—with each other. Without the shuttle and the capability for astronauts to conduct spacewalks, the Intelsat satellite would have been stuck in a useless orbit with no hope of recovery, and its capacity of 120,000 voice circuits and four television channels would have been wasted.

It was the presence of humans, with their ability to adapt to new situations, and figure out alternative approaches, that made the difference. Intelsat was not designed to be recovered or repaired by astronauts, and no one knew whether it could be done. However, careful planning and execution by dedicated NASA and contractor personnel, along with the willingness to rise to a challenge, led to the success we observed last night.

Mr. Speaker, we have learned a great deal from this mission, as we have from each of the shuttle flights. The lessons we have learned will be put to good use as we plan for the assembly and operation of space station Freedom.

Moreover, we can look ahead to the day when the space station is operational and humans are busy working in the shirtsleeve environment of sophisticated life science and materials science laboratories on orbit, as well as performing useful work outside the station. As I look further ahead, I can envision the repair of satellites on the space station—descendents of the Intelsat satellite so successfully repaired last night.

That is what the space station Freedom program is all about. Freedom will be a permanent outpost where we will learn to live and work in space. But it will also be a place where cutting edge research is performed that holds the promise of benefiting all Americans back here on Earth. For example, I have no doubt that we will learn much from biomedical research conducted in space that will help us better understand and even treat terrestrial diseases and medical conditions. In addition, I believe that we are going to be learning a great deal about the fundamental properties of materials by studying their behavior in the absence of gravity, and I would not be surprised if that knowledge does not eventually lead to new materials that could have far-reaching economic benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the successful capture and repair of the Intelsat satellite is a highly visible symbol of the ways in which our Nation's space program benefits Americans. We often forget how much the space program has changed our lives for the better over the last 30 years. Communications satellites such as Intelsat allow us to communicate all over the world almost instantaneously. The artificial joints that have become such a godsend for our veterans and senior citizens are made possible by the chrome cobalt and titanium alloy metals developed by NASA. Many of the diagnostic tools and medical telemetry devices in use in our hospitals today are spinoffs from technology in use in the space program. In many, many ways we benefit from our activities in space. As we applaud the achievement of our astronauts in rescuing the Intelsat satellite, I hope we keep in mind these other gains that have resulted from NASA's efforts.

CONGRATULATIONS TO PRESIDENT LEE OF THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA

HON. LAWRENCE J. SMITH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, much has been written and said about the economic growth and political advances made by the Republic of China during the last few years. Taiwan's achievements are respected throughout the world. Much of the credit is due to the country's evolving political leadership.

The Republic of China is led by Cornell-educated Dr. Lee Teng-hui, who was elected Taiwan's eight President on May 20, 1990. His running mate was Vice-President Li Yuan-zu, a European-educated jurist who has been in charge of Taiwan's constitutional reform task force. Other governmental leaders include Justice Minister Premier Hau Pei-tsun and Yale-educated Foreign Minister Frederick Chien. While Premier Hau has worked to maintain stability and respect for the law at home, Minister Chien wisely exerts the ROC's presence abroad, having recently established new diplomatic offices throughout the former U.S.S.R. and upgraded substantive ties with other nations in Asia and Central America.

Together, Taiwan's leaders have continued to bring their people economic progress and an improved political climate. The result is today's Republic of China, a young, dynamic nation, a model for the developing world. Mr. Speaker, I extend my congratulations to its President, Dr. Lee Teng-hui, on the occasion of his second anniversary in office.

ARMENIAN ATROCITIES

HON. JAMES P. MORAN, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to lead my voice to the memory of those 1.5 million Armenians massacred during and immediately after World War I in one of this century's cruelest atrocities.

On April 24, 1915, over 200 Armenian intellectual leaders were arrested in Constantinople and other centers of Armenian life in the Ottoman Empire. These Armenians were taken from their homes and executed. With one fell swoop, the leadership of Armenia was destroyed and the flame of the Armenian culture extinguished.

In the months following the execution, Turkey began a program of rounding up Armenian religious, intellectual, and political leaders and deporting them to Anatolia where they were systematically executed. In the months following, over 250,000 Armenian soldiers serving in the Ottoman army were disarmed and placed in forced labor battalions. Those that did not succumb to the ravages of famine, disease, and exhaustion were executed by the Ottoman army.

The Armenian civilians remaining, the women, seniors, and children left behind, were deported from their cities and towns. The men and older boys were separated from the groups, never again to be seen, and those remaining were forced on death marches into the desert of Syria. In all, over 1.5 million Armenians were massacred during the 7 years of genocide and more than 500,000 exiled from their homeland in the Ottoman Empire.

History tells us that those who do not study the past are doomed to repeat its mistakes. Nowhere in modern history is this lesson more poignant than in the case of the Armenian genocide. While we closed our eyes and let the painful memory of this atrocity slip from our collective memory, Adolf Hitler remembered the effectiveness of this systematic destruction of the Armenian people and rested secure in the belief that the Western Powers would not intervene in his Holocaust.

Let us not again forget the atrocities of the past.

THE NUTRITION SCREENING RESEARCH ACT

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, today, my colleague, Representative MARILYN LLOYD of Tennessee, is introducing the Nutrition Screening Research Act and I am pleased to join her as an original cosponsor. This bill is an important step toward improving the health of older Americans.

For the past two decades, we have recognized the fact that good nutrition is the basis for maintaining healthy and independent older individuals in our communities. The Older Americans Act's congregate and home delivered meals programs have become the first contact that many elderly people have with the wide range of services aimed at improving the quality of their lives. However, in recent years it has become increasingly clear that there are many senior citizens who are nutritionally at risk who are not being reached by existing programs. The Nutrition Screening Research Act is a response to that problem.

The act, which has also been introduced as S. 2351 in the other body by Senators ADAMS and BINGAMAN, authorizes the Secretary of Health and Human Services to carry out a 3-year study of the extent of malnutrition among the elderly and of the efficacy and cost-effectiveness of nutrition screening for the elderly. This study is to be carried out by the National Institute on Aging in collaboration with the Agency for Health Care Policy and Research.

The results of this study should help us to understand the relationship between nutritional status and the need for institutional care for an individual. Recent research shows that about 40 percent of elderly patients in acute care or long-term care facilities are malnourished. If we can help more individuals stay out of nursing homes by the relatively simple step of supplementing their nutritional resources, then surely we ought to take those steps which will help to identify those most at risk.

Next week, as chairman of the Select Aging Committee's Subcommittee on Human Services, I will hold a hearing entitled "Hunger and Nutrition: The Challenge to Older Americans' Health", as part of the celebration of National Senior Nutrition Week. The purpose of the hearing is to measure existing nutrition programs against the need for those programs and to learn of ways in which we can reach those individuals not now being served, but who desperately need nutritional support.

The Subcommittee on Human Services has emphasized health promotion and disease prevention activities and programs. It is clear from earlier hearings that we need to do more to help people stay well and not just treat them when they become ill. I am very encouraged by the fact that simple, low-technology routine exercise and sound nutrition programs have the potential to help so many older people live a healthy and independent life.

Mr. Speaker, the National Association of Nutrition and Aging Services Programs and other professional organizations working with older Americans support this legislation. I should point out that this provision has been incorporated in the authorization for the National Institutes of Health in the other body. Once again, I commend Representative LLOYD for her initiative in introducing the Nutrition Screening Research Act and I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

STOP UNFAIR FOREIGN SUBSIDIES

HON. SONNY CALLAHAN

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, as a cochairman of the Forestry 2000 Task Force, I want to express my grave concerns about rumors that the administration is about to concede to the Canadian's on the softwood lumber issue.

Mr. Speaker, I, and I am sure the other 125 members of the congressional task force, am hoping these rumors are not true.

As we all know, Canada has subsidized its lumber industry at the expense of the United States industry for years. In fact, in 1986 the Department of Commerce conducted an investigation of Canadian softwood lumber products, and found that the Canadian Government was indeed subsidizing this industry.

Consequently, Canadian lumber captured one-third of the United States market. More than 600 United States mills were forced to close and tens of thousands of American workers lost their jobs due in large part to Canada's practices. Meanwhile, Canadian producers opened 85 new softwood mills.

To remedy the situation, Canada and the United States signed a memorandum of understanding. Under the agreement, Canada imposed a 15 percent charge on softwood lumber headed for the United States to offset its Government subsidies. This action leveled the playing field and allowed competitive U.S. mills to compete with unfairly subsidized foreign manufacturers.

Then last fall, Canada announced it was withdrawing from the 1986 agreement. In March, the Commerce Department issued a preliminary decision that a subsidy exists on Canadian lumber and that a countervailing duty is required to offset the subsidy.

Mr. Speaker, the rumor I am hearing is that the administration is expected to issue its final decision this month, possibly as early as tomorrow, and that thanks to the Canadians' full court press, the administration is going to side with our neighbors to the north.

Mr. Speaker, the timber industry in this country is already in dire straits. Environmental laws, such as the Endangered Species Act, have greatly reduced its access to this country's timber supply. Now if the administration allows subsidized Canadian lumber to flood our markets, I am afraid it will spell disaster for the industry and the tens of thousands of American workers it employs.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the administration to give careful consideration to the needs and concerns of Americans. Let's stop unfair foreign subsidies once and for all.

TRIBUTE TO THE SPACE SHUTTLE "ENDEAVOUR"

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 14, 1992

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer my heartiest congratulations to the crew of the space shuttle Endeavour and the team of NASA and contractor personnel who assisted them for their success in retrieving the Intelsat 6 spacecraft and attaching it to the rocket motor that will propel it from its current useless orbit into one located 22,000 miles above the surface of the Earth.

Once again, astronauts have vividly demonstrated the tremendous value of having people living and working in space. If this mission had been attempted in an automated mode without people present on the scene, it is clear that it would have been a dismal failure.

It was the availability of humans on the scene, with their inherent ingenuity, flexibility, and adaptability, that was able to transform failure into success. This is a lesson that we have been taught again and again in the history of the space program. Many times in the past, hardware or procedures have failed to work after reaching orbit. These have ranged from scientific experiments and data recorders onboard the orbiter, to the main communications antenna on the gamma ray observatory. In each case, the experiment or the entire mission would have been a total failure if it were not for the presence of crew members who could deal with problems, on the spot, and turn failure into success.

Computers and machines simply cannot be programmed or constructed to be so flexible.

The lessons that we have learned in this mission will be of great value as we move into the era of building and operating the space station. Through missions such as the current one, we are learning a great deal about the capabilities and the limits of people working in space. We are also learning about how very massive payloads react when they are handled by a crewman or a robotic arm that is being operated by a crewman.

Mr. Speaker, I take great comfort in knowing that when space station Freedom is being assembled that crews of very highly trained astronauts will be on location to deal with any problems that might arise. The space station is simply too valuable an asset to depend on automated machines to put it together. If things always worked in space as planned and tested on the ground, this would be OK. But, we have learned again and again that this simply is not the case.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this mission also tells us that we should probably adopt a policy of placing a grappling fixture on all spacecraft that are launched into orbit. Such a fixture does not add much weight to a spacecraft, but it significantly improves the ability of space shuttle crews to provide aid to the spacecraft, should the need arise.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this mission also represents another important first. It is the first flight of the orbiter Endeavour. The flawless performance of this orbiter on its maiden voyage is another tribute to the excellent workmanship of the people who comprise the U.S. aerospace industry.

Mr. Speaker, our astronauts, NASA employees, and aerospace industry workers have once again made us proud to be Americans.
